The Council reached political agreement on the recommendations to 10 member states with a view to bringing excessive deficits to an end within a given period.

The Council welcomed the revised Spanish convergence programme and encouraged the Spanish authorities to reduce the deficit faster.

The Council briefly discussed the Italian reserve on the own-resources decision.

No formal notes were taken at the council meeting.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Nelson: There are 1,374 staff in post in the Treasury, as at October 1994, of whom 1,255 are located in London and 119 in the south-east region, Basingstoke.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Public Information

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last three years (a) to produce public information in alternative formats for visually impaired people and (b) to publicise the availability of accessible information among visually impaired people.

Mr. Hague: The Department has spent the following amounts over the last three years:

	Year	£
a)	1992–93	137,352·63
	1994–95	606,766·43 (to date)

b) Although no precise figure can be identified for publicising accessible information, the needs of visually impaired people are taken into account when publicity strategies are developed and would therefore be included in our overall publicity plans. Intermediaries and advisers are alerted to the availability of suitable formats.

Although no precise figure can be identified for publicising accessible information, the needs of visually impaired people are taken into account when publicity strategies are developed and would therefore be included in our overall publicity plans. Intermediaries and advisers are alerted to the availability of suitable formats.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will say which departmental publications are currently available (a) in Braille, (b) in large print and (c) on tape; and if he will show what efforts have been made by his Department to inform visually impaired people about the availability of publications in alternative formats to normal print.

Mr. Hague: The tables show publications and documents available in alternative formats. A catalogue of all publicity material available from the Benefits Agency and a guide to social security for blind and partially sighted people have been placed in the Library.

The consultation document on Government measures to tackle discrimination against disabled people, published on 15 July, made clear the Government's intention to seek to increase the range of information provided in these formats, and the Department will be taking an active role in progressing this work.

The Department automatically considers all alternative formats when preparing new or updated publicity material and now has its own Braillemaster, which is used to provide quantities of documents in Braille whenever possible. The Child Support Agency also has access to this facility.

Every DSS agency follows RNIB guidelines when producing forms and leaflets with regard to type and size. The War Pensions Agency has facilities for producing letters and leaflets in Braille but has not been requested to do so as yet. It is also considering the possibility of "talking" newspapers.

The Benefits Agency has a contract with the RNIB, which produces materials in Braille on its behalf. The RNIB advertises the availability of alternative formats of publications in its magazines. The Benefits Agency also runs the benefit enquiry line, which gives free advice to people with disabilities and to their carers. The service extends to a textphone line and a forms completion service.

In April 1994, the Benefits Agency ran a nationally co-ordinated programme of local information activities aimed at raising the awareness of the services and information it provides for people with disabilities, including the visually impaired. The initiative also sought to increase the awareness among staff of the needs of their customers in this sector. The period of activities ran for two weeks and included radio phone-ins, local exhibitions and a mailing to intermediaries.

An information pack, DIS 10 "Information and services for people with disabilities" was produced, part of which focused on services and material for blind and partially sighted people. The pack was used by the district information officers at local exhibitions, events and benefit surgeries. It was also mailed to appropriate disability groups and intermediaries. The Benefits Agency and DSS headquarters took part in the NAIDEX exhibition on the interdepartmental Government stand. The exhibition runs over three days and attracts approximately 10,000 people.

The Benefits Agency used a series of panels to present information about the services it provides and materials it has produced in alternative formats. A range of leaflets were available with some in large print and audio cassette format.

The Benefits Agency has planned to produce another 12 leaflets in Braille, production will be completed by April 1995.

The Child Support Agency has recently published an ASCII computer disk version of "for parents who live apart". This allows the visually impaired who have access to a computer to read in the disk and display it in a format which suits their visual impairment. The Child Support Agency has had contact with the RNIB regarding the advertising the ASCII computer disk and the other materials in its magazine. The agency's own publicity literature is constantly being updated to alert people to this material for the visually impaired.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to amend the proposed mental health impairment score in respect of the medical test to determine eligibility for incapacity benefit to assess eligibility for those persons suffering from mental health disorders.

Mr. Hague: The proposed new medical test for incapacity benefit contains special procedures for assessing the effects of mental health problems. Those procedures were drawn up in the light of the responses to a consultation document published in December 1993 and the work of a group of experts drawn from a panel appointed to help with the design of the medical test. Detailed information on the proposed test and the development work leading up to it is given in the report published in September 1994 entitled "The medical assessment for Incapacity Benefit", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

National Insurance Contributions

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women aged 60 years are currently not eligible for state pension as a result of an insufficient national insurance contributions record.

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is estimated that approximately 110,000 women aged 60 at 5 April 1993 in the United Kingdom would not be eligible for a basic state pension on their own national insurance contributions, either because they had not paid sufficient national insurance contributions, or because they had opted to pay at the married woman's reduced rate. This figure includes women who would be eligible for a basic pension derived wholly or partially from their spouse's or former spouse's national insurance contributions.

Source: 1 per cent. sample of national insurance records and Government Actuary's Department population projections.

Mrs Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women in the United Kingdom were paying the reduced married woman's national insurance contributions in 1993–94.

Mr. Arbuthnot: In 1992–93—the latest year for which information is available—some 614,000 women in the United Kingdom paid employees' national insurance contributions at the reduced rate.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the responses to his consultation paper "Disability—On the Agenda".

Mr. Hague: We have no plans to do so. We have received more than 1,000 responses to the consultation document "Disability—On the Agenda". It is open to organisations and individuals to publish their own replies should they so wish.

Pensions

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the past five years the percentage of gross domestic product spent by the United Kingdom on the payment of state pensions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table.

Year	£ million GDP	£ million Pension	Percentage
1988–89	484,138	19,237	3·9
1989–90	525,809	20,697	3·9
1990–91	556,759	22,699	4·1
1991–92	580,751	25,543	4·4
1992–93	604,897	26,706	4·4

Income Support

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the income support live E, A and P and total cases for each of the district and branch offices in Great Britain for the first quarter of 1991 and the first quarter of 1994 and the percentage change over that period.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Henry McLeish, dated 20 October 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question requesting various statistical data concerning Income Support cases in Great Britain for the first quarters of 1991 and 1994.

The information is not available in the exact format requested. This is because statistics are not readily available for each of the Agency's Branch Offices and to obtain them for the whole of Great Britain would incur disproportionate cost. However, I have provided the data requested broken down for the 159 Benefits Agency Districts. You should note that some Districts have had boundary changes which may have had some impact upon the percentage changes.

I have enclosed the information and a copy has been placed in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in respect of how many of the sites identified by the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq as being part of Iraq's nuclear weapons programme her Majesty's Government have been informed by the United Nations special envoy that technology and material originating in the United Kingdom has been found; and what is his policy on publishing such information.

Mr. David Davis: International Atomic Energy Agency and UNSCOM inspectors have investigated a wide range of sites in Iraq known to have been part of, or connected to, the nuclear programme where British equipment has been found. It is not our practice to comment on information given to us in confidence by UNSCOM and the IAEA, nor to publish the names of companies which delivered goods to Iraq. Any evidence of wrong-doing will be investigated and, if appropriate, will be a matter for the courts.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's assessment of the degree to which Iraq has complied with each of United Nations Security Council resolutions 687, 712 and 715.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At its last review of the sanctions on Iraq on 14 September, the Security Council decided that Iraq had not complied with resolutions 687 and 715. The next is scheduled for mid-November.

Regrettably, Iraq has not implemented resolutions 706 and 712 under which Iraq would be permitted to sell $1·6 billion of oil, the proceeds of the sale to be used for humanitarian aid and compensating victims of the Gulf war.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he raised the matter of financial commissions paid in connection with military equipment sales from the United Kingdom to Saudi Arabia during his recent meeting with the Saudi Arabian leadership.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did not raise that matter.

Reflections Group

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the names of the persons, together with details of their past and current responsibilities, who have been appointed to the reflections group preparing for the 1996 revision of the treaty of European Union as agreed by the European Council meeting in Corfu.

Mr. David Davis: The only member state whose representative has so far been appointed is Portugal. The Portuguese representative will be Professor André Gonclaves Pereira. He is a former Portuguese Foreign Minister. He now holds a chair in law at Lisbon university.

Kuwait

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to internal democratisation in Kuwait were discussed with the Al-Sabah leadership during his visit to Kuwait on 12 October.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During his recent visit to Kuwait, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's discussions focused on Iraq and the actions of Saddam Hussein. We fully support measures to broaden participation in the process of government. We welcome the Kuwaiti decision taken in June this year to extend the franchise to the sons of naturalised Kuwaitis born after their father's naturalisation.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he discussed with Saudi defence officials or Ministers the Al-Yamamah defence agreement during his recent visit to Kuwait.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During his recent visits to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's discussion with the Saudi Government focused on Iraq and the actions of Saddam Hussein. Al-Yamamah is a major success story for British industry.

Israel (Trade Boycott)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next be holding discussions with other European Union ministers to discuss the implication for Community policy of the decision of the Gulf Co-operation Council to stop boycotting companies that trade with Israel.

Mr. David Davis: There are no plans at present for a discussion on this subject with other European Union Ministers. We welcome this move by the Gulf Co-operation Council. The European Union and the United Kingdom would like to see the boycott on trade with Israel lifted completely.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Goodlad: The following has been spent on official hospitality by the FCO and ODA, in the United Kingdom and overseas.

Year	£ pounds
1991–92	5,700,606
1992–93	6,946,298
1993–94	7,488,121
1994–95 (to date)	3,592,503

The following has been spent on official hospitality by the ODA's agency, the Natural Resources Institute:

Year	£ pounds
1991–92	4,813
1992–93	3,624
1993–94	4,952
1994–95 (to date)	938

There is no separate official hospitality budget for the FCO's agency, Wilton Park. The small amount involved is subsumed in the agency running costs and cannot be extracted without disproportionate cost.

International Organisations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the international organisations of which Britain is a member, showing in each case the date of joining.

Mr. Baldry: A list of international organisations for which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office makes provision is published in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Departmental Report 1994, Cm 2502, pages 85-6, 93-4.

Details of membership of other international organisations will be found in the appropriate supply estimates, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

It is not possible to compile a full list of commencement dates without disproportionate expense, but the generally accepted dates for the major international institutions may be seen in the United Nations Handbook 1994.

Diplomatic Relations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the member states of the United Nations Organisation with which the United Kingdom does not have diplomatic relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The countries are Bhutan, Iraq, North Korea and Libya.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed by each of the standard regions.

Mr. Goodlad: At 1 April 1994, the latest date for which data are available, the FCO employed 7,907 people, of whom 30·9 per cent. worked overseas. The percentages employed in the standard regions were:

South East—63·0 per cent, of which:

	per cent.
Inner London	38·6
Outer London	0·9
Rest of South East	23·5
South West	<0·1
West Midlands	<0·1
Scotland	6·0

No staff were employed in other regions.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific actions have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement the resolutions to prevent illicit trafficking in nuclear materials, agreed to by the International Atomic Energy Agency's 38th general conference.

Mr. David Davis: That matter was discussed shortly before the IAEA general conference at the informal plutonium users group, which meets in Vienna under the chairmanship of the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom raised the issue of the physical security of nuclear installations in the light of the recent reports of smuggling of nuclear materials. The group is now considering specific proposals as to the role it might take, alongside the Interactional Atomic Energy Agency, to help improve security measures.

There are a number of projects already under way. Through the Overseas Development Administration, the United Kingdom contributes towards the International Science and Technology Centre in Moscow which is designed to provide work for Russian scientists, including those in the Russian nuclear industry.

We are also actively engaged in discussions with partners both in the European Union and the G7/G8 to ensure a co-ordinated international response to this problem.

Domestic Servants

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the people granted entry clearance at posts abroad to come into the United Kingdom as overseas domestic workers since 1 May 1991 have (a) been interviewed by an entry officer and (b) received a copy of "Information for Domestic Servants Travelling to the United Kingdom"; and what proportion each of these is of the whole.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the number of overseas domestic workers granted entry clearance since May 1991, and the proportion of those who were interviewed by an entry clearance officer, is available only at a disproportionate cost. Since 20 May 1991, all overseas domestic workers granted entry clearance have been issued with a copy of the leaflet "Information for Domestic Servants Travelling to the United Kingdom".

HEALTH

Public Bodies

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the trusts, health authorities and other public bodies to which her Department makes appointments in the Greater London area, together with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: A full answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health makes the following appointments to national health service bodies in the Greater London area:

Regional Health Authorities	Chairman and five non-executives per board
District Health Authorities	Chairman
Family Health Services Authorities	Chairman
NHS Trusts	Chairmen and up to three non-executives per board
Special Health Authorities for London Post Graduate Teaching Hospitals	Chairman and five non-executives per board
Special Trustees	Up to six Special Trustees per body

Each appointment is for a period of up to four years.

Requests for budget or income details should be made to the organisations directly.

Blood

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what priority is given to the NHS over the private sector for obtaining blood; and if she will publish guidance on this.

Mr. Sackville: It has always been the policy of the national health service to meet non-NHS hospitals' reasonable requests for blood on the basis of availability and clinical need. Private hospitals in this country, and private patients in NHS hospitals, use blood in very small quantities. NHS hospitals are constrained in that treatment for private patients must not be given to the detriment of NHS contracts. We see no need to issue further guidance.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure self-sufficiency in both blood and blood products for England.

Mr. Sackville: In general, England has been self-sufficient in blood.

The EC directive which harmonises the licensing requirements for blood products promotes a policy of Community self-sufficiency in such products derived from the donations of voluntary and unpaid donors but does not forbid importation. This is consistent with our long-standing policy of seeking self-sufficiency in blood products sourced from our own volunteer donors. Nevertheless, whilst promoting self-sufficiency we also recognise the clinical freedom of doctors to choose the product most suitable for an individual patient.

Some patients are receiving imported blood products where the clinician feels this is appropriate. The Bio Products Laboratory continues to make efforts to increase its share of the blood products market but the choice of product for the individual patient remains with the clinician.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of chief executives of national health service trusts in each of the last four years have been paid on a performance-related pay basis.

Mr. Malone: The information is not available centrally.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed by her Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Sackville: The latest staff in post information at 1 July 1994 gives a total of 4,715 staff in the Department of Health. The proportions in each of the standard regions are shown in the table.

Measles

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the cost of the proposed mass measles immunisation programme; which pharmaceutical company will be awarded the contract to provide the amounts of vaccine needed; on what medical, social and public health grounds the decision to provide a mass measles immunisation programme was taken; if the proposed programme is separate from current vaccination arrangements; who will be targeted; and how the programme will be delivered.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of the measles immunisation programme has been estimated at about £20 million. The contract for measles/rubella vaccine for the campaign has been awarded to two companies: SmithKline Beecham and Merieux.

The decision to undertake a comprehensive immunisation campaign against measles was based on the advice of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation following analysis by two independent groups of data on serosurveillance of measles antibodies by age group, measles notifications to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and age-related case confirmation. The results indicated that an epidemic of measles was likely involving 150,000 cases—range 100,000 to 200,000—in England and Wales, mostly affecting children aged five up to 16. Two-thirds of the cases would be in secondary school aged children. This is confirmed by experience in other European countries. Trends in measles notifications in 1994, the usual seasonality of measles and a marked increase in cases experienced in Scotland show that the epidemic is likely to occur in early 1995.

Measles can lead to pneumonia, blindness, deafness, brain damage and even death. Measles is likely to be more serious in older children and we would expect many to be admitted to hospital and about 50 deaths to occur. As well as the morbidity and mortality associated with an epidemic, there would be considerable disruption to children's education. An estimated 300,000 working days would also be lost through parents needing to stay at home with sick children. The cost to the health service of treating a measles epidemic would be up to £30 million.

The main childhood immunisation campaign is separate from the measles campaign, and it will be continuing as usual.

Each district has an immunisation co-ordinator who will also be responsible for organising this campaign. This will be a school-based campaign. District health authorities have been charged with offering immunisation to all children in school forms where most children are aged five up to 16. This will include four-year-olds and 16-year-olds in those school years. Parent information leaflets and consent forms have been distributed through schools and most children will be immunised in school.

As the campaign is on a greater scale than other immunisations carried out in schools, additional staff may be contracted by the health authority to work with the existing school health service during the campaign or to immunise any children missed by the main campaign in November. This may include health visitors, practice nurses or general practitioners. Staffing arrangements will be a matter for local decision according to local circumstances.

Dental Health

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she intends to take to improve the control of cross-infection in dental practice; what measures are intended to improve both the opportunity for and take-up of postgraduate education in the clinical management of cross-infection by dentists and their teams; and how she will monitor the control of cross-infection in dental surgery and practice.

Mr. Malone: The maintenance of clinical standards is primarily a matter for the dental profession. The Department, however, issues guidance which covers the control of cross-infection in dental practice. The latest advice from the Department is contained in a letter from the Chief Dental Officer in July 1993, copies of which are available in the Library.

Central funds are provided to postgraduate deans to provide those postgraduate and continuing education courses that are necessary. That includes the control of cross-infection.

Dentists have a responsibility in their terms of service to observe appropriate cross-infection control procedures. Inspection of practices is undertaken by family health services authorities.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she intends to take to review dental manpower in England and Wales; and what forward planning her Department currently undertakes to plan for future dental manpower needs over the next five-year period.

Mr. Malone: The Department, together with the British Dental Association, regularly conducts reviews of the need for dental manpower.

The current review, which began in 1992, has been deferred so that future developments can take account of Government proposals for the future of national health service dentistry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide figures on the morbidity and mortality rates associated with the administration of general anaesthetics and sedatives for the purpose of dental surgery in England and Wales for each year since 1985.

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table.

Deaths associated with the administration of general anaesthetics for dental treatment

England and Wales Year	Number of deaths
1986	3
1987	5
1988	1
1989	3
1991	0
1993	1

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she plans to provide national standards or guidelines for the administration of general anaesthesia and sedation for children undergoing dental surgery.

Mr. Malone: In October 1992, the United Kingdom health Minister gave the clinical standards advisory group the remit

> "to advise on standards of clinical care for, and access to and availability of services to National Health Service patients referred to out-patient and community health services for dental treatment that may require the administration of a general anaesthetic".

The group is currently preparing its report.

Blood Transfusion Centre, Brentwood

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations were undertaken by the relevant bodies within the national health service concerning the plans to close the blood transfusion centre at Brentwood; and what assessment has been made of the impact of the closure on the total volume of blood available from donors in east London and the speed of its supply to hospitals there and in south Essex.

Mr. Sackville: The proposal to close the Brentwood transfusion centre is part of the proposals for reorganisation of the National Blood Transfusion Service currently out for consultation. The results of the consultation will be carefully considered before decisions are made.

The proposals are mainly about processing and administration. The amount of blood collected in east London and Essex should not be affected. The National Blood Transfusion Service's mobile teams will continue to go to all areas as they do now, wherever centres are amalgamated or not. New locally based teams would be set up and sessions would be easily accessible to donors.

The National Blood Authority is committed to maintaining and wherever possible improving the service it provides to hospitals. One of its key proposals is to establish a network of stockholding units. The National Blood Authority is satisfied that the proposed structure will enable it to continue to respond to emergency demand for blood without detriment to patient care.

Occupational Therapy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that regional health authorities consult directors of social services as to their occupational therapy requirements.

Mr. Bowis: Regional health authorities are required to consult with all employers to calculate the overall demand for non-medical education and training, including occupational therapy. Social services directors are therefore included in this consultation process. The national health service executive and regional health authorities meet regularly with the professional bodies and associations, including the College of Occupational Therapists, to discuss the number of training commissions placed each year. On 13 September 1994, the chief inspector, social services inspectorate, wrote to all directors of social services reminding them of their role in collaborating with regional health authorities in forecasting the numbers of occupational therapists needed to staff their services in future.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each year since 1979 (a) the number of occupational therapy student training commissions funded in each regional health authority and (b) the number of actual students undertaking such commissions.

Mr. Bowis: Figures on the number of occupational therapy student training commissions funded in each regional health authority are not available before 1991. The figures in the table are taken from the annual balance sheet of regional health authorities commissions and detail the number of occupational therapy students funded by regional health authorities since 1991. Information on the number of actual students undertaking such commissions is not held centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken on the recent social services inspectorate report on occupational therapy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Following publication of the report, senior managers of local authority occupational therapy services were invited to two seminars in February and March to discuss the report's findings and exchange ideas on developing good practice. A report of these seminars has been placed in the Library.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Health and I met on 26 July with the local authority associations, the Local Government Board, the Association of Directors of Social Services and the College of Occupational Therapists to discuss the report. We drew particular attention to the need to adopt strategies for the effective and efficient use of occupational therapists. A further meeting is planned to take stock of progress.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts the Health Education Authority has placed with external providers in the last three years; and what was the nature of the work contracted for and the cost.

Mr. Malone: This information is not held by the Department as this is an operational matter for the Health Education Authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the authority for details.

BUPA

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what date she first knew of the appointment of the former chief executive of the National Health Service to the board of BUPA;

(2) if she gave permission for the former chief executive of the NHS to join the board of BUPA.

Mr. Sackville: Sir Duncan Nichol's application for permission to accept an outside appointment following retirement from Crown service was received on 24 May 1994. The application was to accept the appointment from 1 October, that is six months after his last day of service. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was told of the application soon after its arrival in the Department. The established rules relating to business appointment were scrupulously observed. Permission was granted by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Business Appointments and with my right hon. Friend's agreement. Permission was subject to the condition that Sir Duncan takes no part in any dealings between BUPA and the national health service executive for two years from his last day of service.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the trusts which have failed to produce a 6 per cent. rate of return on their assets for the financial year 1993–94;

(2) if she will list (a) the trusts which have reported a deficit and (b) the amount of the deficit, for the financial year 1993–94;

(3) if she will list the trusts which have failed to operate within external financing limits for the year 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: We expect the information to be available in December. It will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the directors of trusts who hold directorships of companies which (a) are doing business and (b) are seeking to do business with the NHS.

Mr. Malone: The code of conduct for national health service boards requires that information about the private interests of non-executive directors of NHS trusts that might be material and relevant to NHS business should be recorded in a public register maintained by each trust. Such information is not available centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the trusts which have borrowed money for capital spending projects; and how much each has borrowed for the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the last quarterly report, prepared by the NHS executive, of trusts in financial peril.

Mr. Sackville: Quarterly reports prepared by the national health service executive represent fast track management information. This information is not audited and is used for internal management purposes only, and is not suitable for publication.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health upon what basis the figure for management costs, to be published by NHS trusts in their annual accounts, is to be calculated; and whether the salaries of all staff who work in corporate management functions will be included in the operational definition of management costs.

Mr. Malone: I shall be making an announcement in due course.

Phenylketonuria

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will include phenylketonuria in those prescriptions accepted for free status.

Mr. Malone: No.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information has to be published by fundholding practices.

Mr. Malone: All general practitioners are required to publish essential information for patients about available services in practice leaflets. In addition, general practitioner fundholders' audited fundholding accounts, and their contracts with hospitals and community units, are public documents and are available on request. General practitioner fundholders also publish annual patients charter statements setting out standards achieved by hospitals with which they hold contracts and detailing the handling of any complaints received.

Chelation Therapy

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has undertaken into the effectiveness of Chelation therapy as a treatment for arteriosclerosis and other related conditions.

Mr. Malone: None.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what record she has of people suffering from radiation damage after radiotherapy; and what plans she has to set up a national register.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not keep records of people suffering from radiation damage after radiotherapy and we have no plans to set up a national register.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will extend the audit of patients damaged by radiotherapy in the breast area to patients damaged in the pelvic area.

Mr. Sackville: The Department commissioned an audit of breast cases because they were all suffering from the same cancer and had similar radiotherapy. Patients who had pelvic radiotherapy had different cancers and underwent different techniques of radiotherapy. It is easier to detect common features between members of the first group than between members of the second. For that reason, we have commenced an audit of women exhibiting adverse effects following breast radiotherapy.

National Health Service Pay

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will show national health service pay expenditure in each year since 1990–91 and her best estimate for 1995–96, showing figures both in millions of pounds and at current prices.

Mr. Malone: The information available is shown in the table.

NHS pay expenditure 1990–91 to 1992–93

Year	Cash Value (£million)	94–95 Prices (£million)
1990–91	11,284	13,258
1992–93	13,750	14,621

1. The figures are based upon gross pay costs including employers' National Insurance and superannuation contributions.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is her intention to issue new guidance on the emergency closure of care homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984 following her evaluation of the urgent actions of Buckinghamshire county council; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Registered Homes Act 1984 already provides adequate procedures to enable homes to be closed if appropriate, including procedures for urgent closure by order of a JP where there appears to be serious risk to the life, health or well-being of residents.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many emergency closures under the Registered Homes Act 1984 have taken place in each local authority area since 1985.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Law Students

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary , Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the numbers of law students embarking on the final year legal practice course in order to qualify for the profession of solicitors; how many he estimates were unable to obtain discretionary grant funding; and what assessment he has made of the effect that the availability of discretionary grant has had on the number of people entering the legal profession.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The award of discretionary grants is a matter for individual local authorities, and policy on postgraduate grant funding is a matter for the Secretary of State for Education. The Lord Chancellor's Department has therefore made no assessment of the numbers of law students embarking on the legal practice course, of those unable to obtain discretionary funding, or of the effect this may have had on numbers of entrants to the legal profession. However, I understand from the Law Society that numbers embarking on the course have risen steadily in recent years. There will be about 6,500 students commencing the 1994–95 course, compared with about 6,000 for 1993–94.

Contract Law

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the answer of 31 March 1993 to the hon. Member of High Peak (Mr. Hendry), Official Report, columns 195–96 what representations he has received concerning the date when reforms of privity of contract should take effect.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since 31 March 1993, representations have been received from the British Retail Consortium and from several members of the public.

Mr. Ernest Saunders

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much legal aid was given to Mr. Ernest Saunders, formerly of Guinness plc.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Lawyers representing Ernest Saunders in the first Guiness trial received legal aid payments totalling £1,342,465. This figure includes VAT and covers all legal representation at the Crown court and the Court of Appeal.

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications there were for legal aid in 1993–94; how many staff are employed in total to check the financial data presented with each claim; how many staff on average check the financial data presented with such claims; and how many prosecutions there were for fraudulent claims in 1993–94.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In 1993–94, there were 413,728 applications for civil legal aid. Civil legal aid means assessments are carried out by trained specialist staff of the Benefits' Agency legal aid assessment office. The office has 134 assessment officers whose duties are to check and assess legal aid applications. In 1993, there were 606,041 applications for criminal legal aid. Applications are dealt with by magistrates court or Crown court centre staff. Prosecutions for fraudulent claims by applicants for legal aid are matters for the police and the Crown Prosecution Service. In 1993–94, the Legal Aid Assessment Office referred 15 cases to them.

Sheriffs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department to whom high sheriffs and under-sheriffs are accountable; and what are the procedures for an individual citizen to pursue a claim against an under-sheriff whom he believes to have acted in an oppressive manner.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A complaint about a sheriff's officer should, in the first instance, be made to the under-sheriff. If the matter is to be taken further, a complaint should go to the high sheriff. High sheriffs are appointed annually by Her Majesty the Queen and are independent of Government.

In addition, complaints can be made to the Under-Sheriffs Association. and the Sheriffs Officers Association. Although the associations have no statutory authority to act on their findings or to punish an offending member, together the two associations are able to investigate and resolve justified grievances. There is no professional requirement for appointment as an under-sheriff, but in practice all are solicitors and a complaint can also be addressed to the Law Society.

The final recourse for a person who wishes to pursue a grievance is to issue legal proceedings against the high sheriff. The high sheriff would be in a position to issue a third party notice to the sheriff's officer.

Magistrates Bench

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what efforts he is making to ensure that the magistrates bench throughout England and Wales is politically balanced.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster seek, through their local advisory committees, to encourage applications from suitable people of all walks of life and political affiliations by means of press notice and articles, posters and leaflets, court open days and contact with local organisations and employers. Appointments are made from those considered to be suitable having proper regard to the various balancing factors, including political affiliation, so that each bench broadly reflects the community it serves.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the political balance of the magistrates bench in (a) the London borough of Brent and (b) England and Wales, broken down into petty sessional areas.

Mr. John M. Taylor: (a) The political affiliation of magistrates in the London borough of Brent, based on the latest information available, is as follows:

Conservative	79
Labour	43
Liberal/Democrat	18
Green	8
Independent/Not Known	18

(b) The individual political balance of each of the 406 petty sessional divisions in England and Wales could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Should the hon. Member require this information for a particular bench or benches it could be supplied to him.

Lord Chancellor

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of meetings of the Cabinet the Lord Chancellor has attended for each year since 1970.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is not Government policy to release details concerning meetings of the Cabinet. The Lord Chancellor is, however, guided, as are all Cabinet Ministers, by paragraph 20 of Questions of Procedure for Ministers, which states:

> "Cabinet meetings take precedence over all other business except meetings of the Privy Council."

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what figures he has concerning the percentage of working time spent by (a) the current Lord Chancellor and (b) Lord Chancellors since 1964 on their three respective roles as head of the judiciary, Speaker of the House of Lords and head of the administration of the civil justice system; what figures he has on the number of hours each has spent sitting as a judge and as Speaker of the House of Lords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested and it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information is available on the number of days which Lord Chancellors since 1964 have spent sitting judicially in the House of Lords and in the Privy Council, and is set out in the table. The Lord Chancellor spends a significant proportion of his time carrying out his duties as Speaker of the House of Lords, for which 14 per cent. of his official salary is paid by the House of Lords. The great majority of the Lord Chancellor's time is spent on his combined duties as head of the judiciary and as a Cabinet Minister with a wide range of responsibilities for the administration of justice.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken by his Department to promote the smoky vehicle hotline; what assessment he has made of how many individual members of the public are aware of its existence; and what additional steps he is prepared to take to publicise its existence.

Mr. Norris: The procedure under which members of the public can report excessively smoky heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles to the Vehicle Inspectorate is explained in detail in a leaflet published in August 1993. I have placed copies in the library.

Copies of the leaflet were sent to local authorities, libraries, citizens advice bureaux, motoring organisations, environmental groups and other interested bodies. The leaflet is currently available on request from both the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment. The reporting procedure is also explained in a leaflet which has been sent out with all vehicle excise licence renewal notices since February 1994.

The Vehicle Inspectorate received almost 3,000 hotline calls between April 1993 and March 1994. We are committed to continuing to run the hotline and to encouraging people to make good use of it.

Public Transport (Fares)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to take into account the surveys carried out by the Association of London Authorities and the London Research Council in reviewing public transport fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I am aware of the results of these surveys. In reviewing operators' proposals for public transport fares, we take all relevant factors into account.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage above inflation increases in fares represent for the period 1984–85 to 1993—94 in respect of (a) London Buses, (b) London Underground and (c) Network SouthEast.

Mr. Norris: The following is the information:

(a) 33 per cent., (b) 34 per cent., (c) 25 per cent.

Night Blindness

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has a record of the number of accidents caused through motorists not being able to identify other vehicle headlamps at night.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available.

SS Richard Montgomery

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the survey in 1993 of the wreck of the SS Richard Montgomery.

Mr. Norris: A very thorough survey of this dangerous wreck was completed in September 1993 and delivered to the Coastguard Agency, which has responsibility for the wreck. The wreck is surveyed on a biennial basis to monitor its condition. A hydrographic survey of seabed area surrounding the wreck was also completed by the Port of Sheerness Ltd. The port authority is under contract to the Coastguard Agency to guard the wreck.

The survey revealed that there was no evidence of any major change to the wreck since the previous survey in 1991, although it continues to deteriorate slowly and may be expected to begin to break up within the next few years. No dangerous material was found during the survey, although a substantial quantity of munitions remain on board. The silt surrounding the site was shown to be mobile with a deep scour under the wreck itself which is expected to accelerate the deterioration of the hull and eventually lead to the disappearance of that part of the wreck still visible above the surface.

In the light of the survey findings, I have decided that the site of the wreck should remain a prohibited area under the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973 and that no attempt be made to clear it or its cargo. The wreck will continue to be monitored and another survey undertaken in due course.

I have placed in the Library a report by the Coastguard Agency summarising the result of the 1993 survey, and the steps taken over the years to contain the danger from the munitions on board.

I am sending a copy to my hon. Friend.

Marine Accidents

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will name those flag states which, according to the 1993 annual report of the marine accident investigation branch, leave the investigation of accidents involving vessels bearing their flag to other administrations; and what representations he has made to those countries.

Mr. Norris: A definitive list is not available. No direct representations have been made, but the United Kingdom is working through IMO to encourage those flag states to fulfil their obligations under the various conventions.

Sleeper Services

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to the provision of rail sleeper services between London and Scotland; and if he will make it his policy that existing services will be guaranteed for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Watts: The provision of sleeper services between London and Scotland is at present a matter for British Rail. In future it will be for the operator to decide on the level of such services in the light of the minimum service specification set by the franchising director. The objectives, instructions and guidance given to him by the Secretary of State made it clear that for the initial letting of franchises minimum service specifications should be based on the level of services being provided by British Rail immediately prior to franchising, taking into account the existence of and justification for seasonal variations in service schedules.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to promote the inclusion of the west coast main line route in the proposed trans-European railway network currently under consideration by the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The west coast main line is already included in the draft trans-European railway network. We have proposed adding the modernisation of the line to the list of priority projects which is being developed by the Christophersen group, and have provided the Commission with full briefings on its scale and significance. We are optimistic that the group will recognise the importance of this project to the trans-European railway network in the report which it is due to present to the European Council in December.

Gatwick Airport

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cubic metres of soil are being removed to make the cutting for the M3 at Twyford Down; and how much would need to be removed if an additional runway were to be constructed at Gatwick as suggested by the RUCATSE working group.

Mr. Norris: I understand that some 1·8 million cubic metres of soil were removed to make the cutting for the M3 at Twyford Down. The RUCATSE working group estimated that, at Gatwick, some 18 million cubic metres of soil would need to be removed in constructing the northern runway option that was subject to detailed study.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has undertaken the further study, referred to in the report of the RUCATSE working group, into the possibility that the construction of a runway at Gatwick in a deep cutting would create turbulence.

Mr. Norris: No.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Bodies

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the Greater London area, together with the total annual budget for each body and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the chart.

Chess

Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received from the British Chess Federation concerning the recognition of chess as a sport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: We have received several representations from the British Chess Federation concerning the recognition of chess as a sport. However, my Department's responsibility is for physical sport and recreation. The Government's interest in intellectual pursuits rests with the Department for Education, from which the British Chess Federation receives some financial assistance.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Sproat: The information requested is as follows:

	Department of National Heritage	Historic Royal Palaces Agency	Royal Parks Agency
1992–93	£22,037	£17,690	£1,032
1993–94	£18,278	£16,374	£8,541

The figures for the years prior to the establishment of my department, in April 1992, are not available.

Channel 3

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what arrangements he intends to introduce to ensure that all persons licensed to provide Channel 3 services will continue to share transmission and distribution costs in such a manner as to maintain the viability of regional services beyond the end of 1996.

Mr. Dorrell: As required under the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1990, I have given my approval to the arrangements proposed by the Independent Television Association for sharing the transmission costs for Channel 3 for the period 1994–1998. These arrangements have the unanimous approval of all the Channel 3 licensees.

ENVIRONMENT

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Gummer: Expenditure on official hospitality by my Department—including Property Holdings—was approximately £67,000 in 1990–91, £63,000 in 1991–92, £98,000 in 1992–93 and £75,000 in 1993–94.

Expenditure on hospitality by the Department's agencies was £15,000 in 1990–91, £29,200 in 1991–92, £41,000 in 1992–93 and £32,000 in 1993–94.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to introduce transitional relief for authorities which will be adversely affected by the new rating list coming into effect on 1 April 1995.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department issued a consultation paper on 3 October setting out proposals for transitional arrangements to phase in the effects of the 1995 revaluation. Copies have been placed in the Library. We expect to announce our decisions by the end of November. The arrangements would apply to local authorities, in respect of rate bills on the properties they occupy, in the same way as to other ratepayers.

Conference Speeches

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of his speeches to (a) the Conservative and Unionist party conference and (b) the Tory green initiative fringe meeting on matters for which he has departmental responsibility at Bournemouth on 13 October.

Mr. Gummer: In responding to the environment and planning debate I did not use a pre-prepared text. However in the course of my speech I confirmed that the Government had begun work on a major White Paper on the countryside; I announced that the Government intended to legislate to secure a dramatic increase in recycling of packaging waste; I announced the publication of draft legislation for the creation of the new environment agency in order to maintain this country's lead in developing methods of integrated pollution control; and I emphasised the importance of raising the quality of new development and the quality of the built environment generally.

At the fringe meeting of the Tory Green Initiative I discussed the outstanding record of the Conservative party in government in taking practical and specific action to deal with environmental issues and I emphasised the responsibility which falls to a party of government not to pretend that high environmental standards can be achieved without anyone anywhere having to meet the bill. I pointed to the fundamental inconsistency of the Opposition, who demand higher environmental standards while attacking the necessary means of delivery, in particular VAT on fuel, the sensible extension of water metering and additional taxation in petrol.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be making an announcement on the method it is proposed to use to ensure that the National Rivers Authority new main and new second fund will be fully able to meet all its liabilities.

Mr. Atkins: Section 173 of the Water Act 1989 puts beyond any doubt my right hon. Friend's obligation to meet any deficit. The method and timing of any action necessary under the section will ensure that pension liabilities are met in full, while minimising the burden on the taxpayer.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is as follows:

Environment Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria will be used in the appointment of the head of the environment agency.

Mr. Atkins: In appointing the chairman and other members of the environment agency, my right hon. Friend will have regard to the desirability of appointing persons who have experience of, and have shown capacity in, some matter relevant to the functions of the agency.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the time frame he intends to adopt in directing existing waste regulation authorities to submit schemes for the transfer of property, rights and liabilities to the environment agency, as required under paragraph 3(3) (a) and (b) of the Environment Agencies Bill.

Mr. Atkins: Timing will depend upon passage of the necessary legislation. If this is enacted by the summer of 1995, it is the Government's intention to invite authorities shortly thereafter to submit transfer schemes and for the Secretary of State to complete the approval of schemes in time for the agency to be vested on 1 April 1996.

Pollution Control

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts have been awarded by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution for the monitoring of releases from sectors controlled by integrated pollution control.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—HMIP—has awarded the following contracts for the routine monitoring of releases from processes regulated by Integrated Pollution Control—IPC:

Contract	Contractor
1. Emissions to Atmosphere—National Power Sites	BCRA Scientific and Technical Services Ltd.
2. Emissions to Atmosphere—Powergen Sites	TBV Science
3. Releases to Water—National Power Sites	National Rivers Authority
4. Releases to Water—Powergen Sites	Yorkshire Environmental Ltd.
5. Releases to both Atmosphere and Water from Chemical Waste Incinerators	Fugro Environmental Ltd.
6. Releases to Atmosphere in the Midlands and South West of England	EA Technology

In addition, ad-hoc/reactive monitoring of IPC controlled processes is carried out under the following contracts:

Contract	Contractor
7. Releases to Water and Effluent Streams	National Rivers Authority
8. Releases to Atmosphere in the NW and NE Regions of HMIP	Entec Cremer and Warner Ltd.
9. Releases to Atmosphere in Wales, the Midlands and South West Regions of HMIP	CRE Group Ltd.
10. Releases to Atmosphere in the Anglian and Southern Regions of HMIP	AEA Technology

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many enforcement notices have been served on British Nuclear Fuels plc under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 since it came into force; and what actions have been taken by British Nuclear Fuels plc to comply.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has served one enforcement notice on British Nuclear Fuels plc under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. This was served on 20 June 1994 and related to its Sellafield site.

British Nuclear Fuels plc confirmed compliance with the requirements of this notice within the specified time in a report submitted to HMIP on 1 September 1994.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Gummer: As at 1 October 1994, there were 6,340 non-industrial staff in my Department, excluding PSA Services. These staff were employed in each of the regions as follows:

Region	Staff employed as percentage of total
Eastern	1·1
East Midlands	1·6
London	61·9
North West	7.9
Northern	2·0
South East	4.0
South West	13·1
West Midlands	3·0
Yorkshire & Humberside	3·4
Scotland	1·1
Wales	0·9

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the rules governing profit-related pay in relation to local authority direct labour organisations; and what changes he proposes to make.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Subject to the statutory requirement for local authority direct services organisations —DSOs—to meet the prescribed financial objective for the service in question, and to the normal rules of financial propriety and regularity, local authorities have discretion to structure DSO pay in whatever way they think appropriate, including linking it to financial surpluses achieved. My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce rules on this matter.

Odour Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received on the two odour pollution incidents at the Global Environmental plant in Leeds in August; and what steps have been taken to avoid future discharge from wet air oxidation waste processing plants.

Mr. Atkins: The global environmental waste disposal site in Leeds is subject to waste management licensing under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Enforcement of environmental regulations at the site is therefore a matter for the West Yorkshire waste regulation authority. The authority is investigating the incidents referred to and will decide what action, if any, should be taken.

On the general question of the control of discharges from wet oxidation plants, a waste regulation authority can, under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, impose such conditions as it considers appropriate in a waste management licence in order to minimise the risk of pollution of the environment or harm to human health, including conditions relating to the control of odour release.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to introduce primary legislation to amend the homeless persons legislation contained in part III of the Housing Act 1985; and what administrative action he will be taking to further the proposals contained in the consultation document "Access to Local Authority and Housing Association Tenancies" pending the introduction of such legislation.

Mr. Curry: We will introduce legislation when parliamentary time permits. Meanwhile we will be encouraging local authorities to pursue such proposals as developing advice services, improving the efficiency and effectiveness of their allocation systems, working in partnership with the private rented sector, and examining the potential to develop common housing registers with housing associations.

Enterprise Zone (Easington)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the granting of enterprise zone status to areas within the district of Easington.

Sir Paul Beresford: The designation of the proposed East Durham—Easington—enterprise zones is contingent on satisfactory arrangements being in place to ensure that EC sectoral restrictions on aids to industry can be enforced. As soon as these arrangements have been finalised, the United Kingdom statutory procedures will be initiated and these normally take about six months.

Broads Authority (Planning)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what sections of which planning legislation planning enforcement action may be taken against individuals in the area now covered by the Broads Authority.

Sir Paul Beresford: As the local planning authority, the Broads Authority has the following discretionary enforcement powers under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, as amended by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991:

(1) to issue an enforcement notice (section 172);

(2) to serve a stop notice (section 183);

(3) to serve a breach of condition notice (section 187A);

(4) to apply to the Court for an injunction to restrain a breach of planning control (section 187B); and

(5) the right of entry on to land for enforcement purposes (section 196A)

Guidance to planning authorities on the use of these powers is given in DOE circulars 21/91 and 17/92, copies of which I am sending to my hon. Friend.

Special Conservation Areas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish a list of proposed special areas of conservation.

Mr. Atkins: I expect to be able to publish a list of candidate special areas of conservation for consultation by Christmas.

Power Stations

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has the authority to require power stations fitted with flue gas desulphurisation plant, electrostatic precipitators or low oxides of nitrogen burners to use that plant across the whole range of power output.

Mr. Atkins: Yes, if it is not excessively costly to run the abatement equipment.

A condition may be included in an authorisation granted under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, to require an operator to run an abatement plant when the authorised process is being operated, provided that it is not excessively costly to do so and provided that there is not some other preferable technique, having regard to cost and efficacy.

EC Directives

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases the European Commission has started against the United Kingdom for non-compliance with directive 76/464/EEC; and what sites are involved.

Sir Paul Beresford: There have been a number of exchanges with the Commission about directive 76/464/EEC in recent years. Details of proceedings under article 169 of the treaty are kept in confidence between the Commission and the member state Government.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Lord Archer

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what correspondence he has received on the withholding from publication of his Department's report on the allegations of insider dealing by Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Heseltine: There is no provision in the Financial Services Act 1986 for inspectors reports to be published and it follows that it would be inappropriate to place a copy in the Library of the House. I have received several letters from Members of the House and others on the subject.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the dates on which his Department communicated with the inspectors who conducted the inquiry into allegations of insider dealing involving Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare, showing the purpose of each communication.

Mr. Heseltine: It is normal practice for officials of my Department to keep in regular contact with inspectors during the course of their inquiries. Details of those contacts are confidential.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the (a) budgeted and (b) total cost of the inquiry into the allegations of insider trading involving Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare.

Mr. Heseltine: The total cost, including inspectors' fees, disbursements and VAT, of the investigation into alleged insider dealing in the shares of Anglia Television Group plc was £213,767. Individual inquiries are not subject to separate budgets.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken to obtain the consent of Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare to releasing the report on alleged insider dealing in relation to the MAI purchase of Anglia Television.

Mr. Heseltine: I have taken no such action.

Los Angeles Times (Interview)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the interview he gave to the Los Angeles Times in the summer.

Mr. Heseltine: No.

Oil and Gas Fields

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental protection conditions cover the loan by the European Investment bank to BHP Hamilton Oil for its development of oil and gas fields off the Welsh Coast.

Mr. Eggar: Before the loan was granted environmental impact assessments—EIAs—were carried out in accordance with directive EEC/85/337 on all on-shore and off-shore elements of the project. The project has also met all the environmental requirements of the United Kingdom authorities, following their separate EIA on the off-shore installations. A 500m shipping exclusion zone and a 1,000m development zone will operate around each offshore structure; radar coverage from Liverpool will be extended to include these structures.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the circumstances in which, as a matter of policy, persons other than departmental staff are engaged to investigate allegations of insider dealing under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Heseltine: There is no laid down policy: decisions are made on a case-by-case basis.

Credit Reference Agencies

Ms Mowlam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the use of postal codes or addresses by credit reference agencies and other institutions in assessing credit worthiness.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The matter was assessed in 1992 by the then Director General of Fair Trading. He concluded that the use of such information was legitimate provided that it was not capable of outweighing all other factors. I have no plans to initiate a further assessment.

Jaguar Cars

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from Ford or Jaguar cars about investment by his Department for the development of a new model to be built in Coventry by Jaguar.

Mr. Eggar: Ford and Jaguar have discussed with my Department the scope for possible selective financial assistance for a new Jaguar model, codenamed the X200. No application has yet been made.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information is as follows:

Public Body	Title of Appointment	Duration	Date appointment expires	Salary
Public appointments in the West Midlands Region
Office of Electricity Regulation	Director General of Electricity Supply	5 years	31 August 1999	£100,000 pa

Insider Dealing

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many inquiries into alleged insider dealing his Department has undertaken under the Financial Services Act 1986 in the past three years; what period of time elapsed between the decision to commence an inquiry and its completion in each case; and on how many occasions persons other than departmental staff have been used as investigators.

Mr. Heseltine: In the last three years inspectors have been appointed to investigate alleged insider dealing under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 on 10 occasions as follows:

Case	Date of appointment	Date of report	Inspectors
A	19 December 1991	31 July 1992	Internal
B	21 February 1992	Not yet reported	Internal

Droit de Suite Levy

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions the Government have taken part in with the European Union on the imposition of a droit de suite levy on works of art; what position it has taken; and whether he proposes to introduce such a tax.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government decided against the introduction of droit de suite, or "resale right", in the United Kingdom when this was considered during the process of review leading up to the present copyright legislation, the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, since it was not convinced that this right, which entitles artists to a share in the proceeds of the second and subsequent sales of their work, is either justified or satisfactorily workable in practice. There are no plans to reverse this decision, but the Commission is studying droit de suite as part of its working programme in the copyright field announced in 1991, since several other EC states already provide a right of this kind in their copyright laws. So far as the Government are aware, however, the Commission has not yet decided whether to bring forward any proposals for harmonisation in this area. It has not sought the views of member states on the matter, but has nevertheless been made aware of the United Kingdom's general reservations on the principle of droit de suite.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current salaries of the chairman and chief executive of the Post Office; and what has been the average increase over a three-year period in the salaries of chairmen and chief executives of newly privatised companies.

Mr. Eggar: The chairman's basic salary is £101,500 per annum and the chief executive's £182,700. The figure of the average increase over a three-year period in the salaries of chairmen and chief executives of newly privatised companies is not available as no information on these salaries is held centrally.

Departmental Transport

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the engagements of the Minister for Energy and Industry for 10 September 1993; what means of transport was used to attend these engagements; and who provided or paid for it.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 October 1994]: I had a number of engagements in my office on 10 September 1993 and travelled by ministerial car to Heathrow airport to commence an overseas visit on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions he or his ministerial colleagues have used transport provided by Mr. R. Budge or R.J.B. Ltd.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 October 1994]: I am not aware of any occasion on which any Minister whilst serving in this Department used transport provided by Mr R. Budge or RJB Ltd.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines exist about the offers or use by transport provided by companies with which his Department has dealings.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 21 October 1994]: The relevant guidelines are contained in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION

Students

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the estimated cost of extending mandatory fee support to part-time first degree students.

Mr. Boswell: The cost would depend upon the decisions taken about eligible courses, future student numbers, the maximum fee entitlement and the account to be taken of the personal circumstances of potentially eligible students.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children were excluded from school in the last academic year.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Failing Schools

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the quality of the inspectors' reports on failing schools.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what evidence there is to suggest that staff at grant-maintained schools wish to return to local education authority control.

Mr. Robin Squire: There is none of which the Department is aware. Recent suggestions that some grant-maintained schools in Hillingdon wish to return to LEA control are completely unfounded.

Chinese Students

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what funding she (a) has made and (b) intends to make available for Chinese students, with particular reference to translators, to study English.

Mr. Boswell: None. However, Chinese students will receive nearly £1·4 million of Government funding in the 1994–95 financial year from FCO, ODA and the British Council scholarship schemes for overseas students. It is not possible to identify how much of this funding will benefit students who wish to study English with the aim of becoming translators.

Further Education

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what evidence exists to suggest that there has been a substantial change in the numbers of further education students in the last 12 months;

(2) what has been the change in the numbers of further education students in the last 12 months; and what subjects and what geographical areas are most affected.

Mr. Boswell: The number of students on further education courses at institutions of further or higher education, including sixth form colleges, increased by about 3 per cent. between the 1992–93 and 1993–94 academic years. In terms of full-time equivalents the increase was about 6 per cent.

All regions showed an increase of some magnitude, but that in Greater London was particularly pronounced. Most main subject groups also showed an increase. The largest increases were for subjects allied to medicine, education and mathematical and computing sciences.

Korean Students

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many Korean nationals are currently studying at United Kingdom institutions of higher education.

Mr. Boswell: In the academic year 1992–93 there were 596 students from Korea studying at institutions of higher education in the United Kingdom—572 students from South Korea and 24 students from North Korea. Data for the academic year 1993–94 is not yet available.

Teachers Pay

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the annual costs of implementing the school teachers' pay and conditions document 1993 in relation to teacher salary re-assessments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department estimated that the overall cost of implementing the school teachers' pay and conditions document 1993 would be 1·5 per cent. across the profession as a whole. Costs will have varied from teacher to teacher for a number of reasons when salaries were re-assessed on 1 September 1993.

Village Primary Schools

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she proposes to take to safeguard the future of village primary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend will always consider very carefully, and on their individual merits, any statutory proposals involving village schools which come to her for decision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Jack: The information covers all permanent staff employed by the Department, including agencies, at 1 October 1994. Part-time staff are counted as one.

Total staff in Department 10,307

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now publish figures for how much the United Kingdom contribution to the common agricultural policy costs the average British family per week.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 15 March, Official Report column 601–2.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current estimate of the cost of the common agricultural policy in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995; and what was the cost in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1993.

Mr. Jack: The Commission has proposed a supplementary and amending budget for 1994 which would reduce the common agricultural policy budget from 36,465 mecu—£28,143 million— to 34,787 mecu—£26,848 million. The 1995 draft budget has been set at the level of the agricultural guideline of 36,994 mecu—£29,056 million. Expenditure in 1992 and 1993 was 32,109 mecu—£22,722 million—and 35,095 mecu—£27,571 million—respectively.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due and the salary.

Mr. Jack: The south mercia and north mercia regional panels cover the west midlands region and Shropshire respectively. The regional panels are advisory non-statutory bodies consisting of between eight and 10 members. The members are appointed for an initial period of up to three years, normally from 1 April, and can serve for a maximum of six years. The panel chairman and members receive no salary, but can claim travel and subsistence expenses.

Agricultural wages committees for each of the regions have two independent members appointed by the Minister, whose terms of appointment end on 31 December 1994, together with additional members appointed by other organisations. Members are appointed for a period of up to two years and receive a daily fee for attending meetings of £68. If elected chairman of the agricultural wages committee, they are entitled to a fee of £86 per day.

The Minister appoints the chairmen of the agricultural dwelling house advisory committees for the two areas for up to three years. Most of these appointments are due for renewal on 31 December 1994. The chairman receives a daily fee of £86.

The Severn-Trent regional flood defence committee of the National Rivers Authority covers most of the specified area. The Minister is responsible for the appointment of a chairman and seven members; these appointments are for three years and new ministerial appointments will be made on 1 July 1997. Other members are appointed by local authorities and the National Rivers Authority. The chairman receives a salary of £11,200 per annum; members receive expenses.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each of the last five years for which figures are available, and broken down into the constituent counties within the United Kingdom, the number of cases of application for sheep annual premium which have been rejected because the application date was missed by the applicant; and what percentage that number constitutes of the total number of SAP applications made in that county for that year.

Mr. Jack: The number and percentage of sheep premium claims rejected because they arrived after the last date for receipt, in respect of each agriculture department for each of the last five years, are set out in the table. I will write to the hon. Member to provide the breakdown by county.

Claims for Sheep Annual Premium rejected after late submission

England	*	*	*	*	40	0·09	190	0·44	61	0·15
Scotland	14	0·08	15	0·09	9	0·05	38	0·22	12	0·07
Wales	1	0·01	7	0·04	3	0·02	10	0·05	18	0·01
Northern Ireland	34	0·26	26	0·02	18	0·13	24	0·18	31	0·25

* No figures are available for 1991 and 1992

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider making a case to the European Commission to allow national discretion in a limited number of circumstances to enable sheep annual premium applications to be deemed to be received by the due application date where sheep producers have a bona fide reason for not lodging the necessary application forms on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Member states have discretion under the sheep annual premium scheme to accept claims lodged after the final date for receipt where the reasons for late lodgement constitute force majeure, which covers the most exceptional of circumstances. Wider discretion to accept late claims would carry the risk that the retention period, which is a fundamental requirement of the scheme, could not be effectively enforced.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his predecessor's answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 562, if he is now able to provide the information requested for 1994 concerning changes in hill livestock compensatory allowance payments.

Mr. Waldgrave: There remains a small number of payments to be made under the 1994 hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme. The information requested is therefore not yet complete. I will write to the hon. Member in January 1995 when the information will be available.

Nephrops

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will ask the Council of Ministers to increase current precautionary nephrops total allowable catches in the North sea to take into account increased catches from Fladden bank;

(2) what proposals he has to introduce separate precautionary total allowable catches for nephrops on the Fladden bank in the North sea;

(3) what steps he is taking to prevent current nephrops quota being reduced before the end of the current year.

Mr. Jack: Following representations from the fishing and processing industries, my Department is approaching the European Commission with a request for an increase in the current precautionary total allowable catch for North sea nephrops. I shall be considering the case for treating the Fladden ground separately. In the meantime, strict controls are being maintained in order to keep this year's fishery open as long as possible.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ban twin prawn trawls.

Mr. Jack: EC technical conservation rules permit fishing for nephrops with a minimum mesh size of 70 mm in the North sea and allow fishing for cod and other white fish with a minimum mesh size of 100 mm. Since August 1993, with the agreement of the United Kingdom industry, it has not been possible for United Kingdom fishing vessels to use twin or multirig fishing gear in the North sea, except on the Fladen ground, unless the minimum mesh size has been 100 mm. There are no current plans to change this.

Animal Health and Veterinary Group

Mr. Booth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he proposes to make in his Department's functions and organisation following the management review of the animal health and veterinary group.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 16 March 1993, my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer), announced a review of the Ministry's Animal Health and Veterinary Group with a view to improving the use of the Ministry's resources in this area. The review team reported earlier this year and a consultation document is now being sent out to interested organisations and placed in the Library of the House which sets out the initial conclusions which I have reached in consultation with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales, who share with me policy responsibilities in this area.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of ADAS.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are anxious to press ahead with the privatisation of ADAS as soon as possible. However, it is necessary to have regard to financial aspects, competition policy and the need for any privatised body to avoid unacceptable conflicts of interests. Accordingly, we have now instructed officials to look into the possibility of privatising part of the organisation while avoiding these potential problems. The expectation is that the privatised body will include the whole of the commercial consultancy and commercial research and development arms and some other work. Some functions presently located within ADAS would probably remain within the departments after privatisation. I will make a further statement in due course.

WALES

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last three years to (a) produce public information in alternative formats for visually impaired people and (b) publicise the availability of accessible information amongst visually impaired people.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific analysis his Department has conducted on the cost and efficiency of introducing performance-related pay to clinical grades in the national health service.

Mr. Redwood: Local managers are in the best position to devise local pay schemes for clinicians linked to the needs of the hospital. The assessment of the cost and efficiency of any such schemes would also be for local determination.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Redwood: The amounts spent by the Welsh Office and its agencies on official hospitality were:

Year	Welsh Office £	Cadw £
1990–91	45,419	632
1991–92	35,982	481

Student Maintenance Grant

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average maintenance grant paid by Welsh local education authorities to students for the 1994–95 academic year; and what the figure was for (a) the 1993–94 academic year and (b) the 1979–80 academic year.

Mr. Redwood: The average net maintenance grant paid as part of a mandatory award by local education authorities in Wales was £1,540 in the academic year 1989–90, £1,620 in 1991–92 and £1,690 in 1992–93. This is fully reimbursed by central Government.

Discretionary student awards are funded entirely from LEAs' own resources. The average net maintenance grant paid as part of a discretionary award by LEAs in Wales was £620 in the academic year 1989–90, £670 in 1991–92 and £440 in the academic year 1992–93.

1992–93 is the latest academic year for which information on LEAs' expenditure on either mandatory or discretionary awards is available. Similar information for the years prior to 1989–90 is not readily available.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an up-to-date list of all the (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each tourist board, indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Wales tourist board has exclusive responsibility for tourism in Wales. The current board comprises:-

Chairman: Mr. A.R. Lewis—Broadcaster and journalist

Members: Mrs T. Bevan—Retired former head of programmes with BBC Wales

Mr. S. Wanhill—Professor of Tourism, University of Wales College of Cardiff

Mr. J. Dunscombe—Managing Director of Washington Travel

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mozambique

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he plans to provide for rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes following the elections in Mozambique.

Mr. Baldry: We plan to maintain a substantial bilateral development programme, focusing on support for economic reform, promotion of rural development in Zambezia province and English language teaching. We shall also continue to provide emergency assistance where appropriate, channelling it through non-governmental organisations mainly for seeds, tools and de-mining.

Mozambique will also benefit under the EC's southern African reconstruction and rehabilitation programme, the United Kingdom share of which is over £12 million.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many humanitarian flights have landed in Tuzla, in the former Yugoslavia, since the airport was officially opened in March; and what are now the principal obstacles to further humanitarian flights.

Mr. Baldry: It has not been possible to use Tuzla airport for humanitarian aid flights because the parties have not provided a security guarantee.

PRIME MINISTER

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

The Prime Minister: No such surveys have been commissioned by my office.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he made during his recent visit to Saudia Arabia about the Arab embargo on Israeli goods; and what was the reaction of the Government of Saudi Arabia.

The Prime Minister: During my visit to Saudi Arabia I made clear the importance we attach to a just and lasting settlement on all aspects of the peace process. The Gulf co-operation states have since announced that, for all practical purposes, the secondary and tertiary elements of the Arab boycott will no longer be applied. I welcome any moves towards the full lifting of the boycott.

Public Appointments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish a statistical analysis of the number of known members of each political party represented in the House who are listed by the Cabinet Office as (a) current and (b) potential appointees to public bodies.

The Prime Minister: Appointments to public bodies are made on the basis of merit, aptitude and suitability to meet the demands of the post.

Nominees on the public appointments unit's register are not required to give any details of their political affiliation. From the information made available by individuals, only 12·5 per cent. are known to have been members of a political party.

Constitutional Discussions

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what machinery exists for the Queen to receive the collective advice of the Heads of Government of all the Commonwealth countries of which she is head of state when matters arise which relate to the common constitutional link of the monarchy.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty the Queen consults her Ministers in the United Kingdom, and in those countries of which she is sovereign, in matters relating to her capacity as Head of the Commonwealth.

Her Majesty also has contact with heads of state and Government of Commonwealth countries at the biennial Commonwealth heads of government meetings and on other occasions.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what communications he, or the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, has had with Heads of Government of other Commonwealth countries of which the Queen is sovereign on matters relating to the succession.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what communications he, or the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, has had with heads of Government of other Commonwealth countries of which the Queen is sovereign on matters relating to the common constitutional link of the Crown since his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 352.

The Prime Minister: None.

Insider Trading

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 18 October, Official Report, columns 142–43, if he will set out on which occasions statements were made by Ministers requiring that DTI inspectors' reports on matters relating to insider trading inquiries be not published; and if he will give the Official Report column references to which he is referring.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 October 1994]: The question was debated during the passage of the Financial Services Bill. I refer the hon. Member to the Official Report of the House of Lords, 29 July 1986, columns 737–44.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on progress under the War Crimes Act 1991.

The Attorney-General: Seven cases have now been investigated by the police to a stage where it has become possible for the Crown Prosecution Service to consider the question of whether or not to prosecute. Inquiries continue into these and other cases.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

37. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will review the arrangements for the consideration of EC legislation.

Mr. Newton: The arrangements are kept under constant review.

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received concerning entitlement to awards for emphysema contracted through pit face working.

Mr. Hague: I have received a number of representations about the qualifying criteria recommended by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, in respect of payment of benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

Poverty

Mr Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will constitute an inquiry into the current levels and extent of poverty in Britain.

Mr. Burt: Research is now regularly conducted into the role of social security and its impact on those in low-income households. A list of research projects sponsored by the Department is published in the Social Security yearbooks, formerly the "DSS Handbook of Research and Development", copies of which are in the Library.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the total cost and number of recipients of housing benefit in the current year; and what were the equivalent figures for 1982.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is in the table.

Child Support Agency

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters he has received concerning the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: Between April 1993 and the end of September 1994, approximately 18,000 letters have been received at DSS headquarters covering a range of views about child support.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors led to the delay in assessing child maintenance by the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement on what proportion of assessments for lone mothers take more than six months.

Mr. Burt: A variety of factors were involved, including early operating difficulties and clients' response to the new arrangements.

The agency acknowledge that an unacceptable proportion of cases take more than six months to clear and is already taking action to improve processing times.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operations of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: Despite acknowledged early difficulties, the performance of the agency has improved significantly during the first part of this year. I will be monitoring its performance very closely to ensure that such improvements continue.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the recommendation made by the Social Security Select Committee in its first report on the operation of the Child Support Act that if the appeal is decided in favour of the applicant, a reimbursement of the excess paid should be made within five working days and that this should also be part of the citizens charter for the agency; and what plans he has to implement that recommendation.

Mr. Burt: The Government did not accept this recommendation. The reasons are set out in the Government's response to the report—CM 2469, published February 1994.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the detection of social security fraud.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The fight against fraud remains a top priority. In 1993–94 Benefits Agency investigators caught 312,000 cheats and a record £654 million of fraud was identified and stopped.

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he is planning to reduce fraud involving order books and giros.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr Luff).

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what incentives he is giving to Benefits Agency staff to reduce order book fraud.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Benefits Agency staff are expected to be alert to the possibility of fraud at all times. Last year a record £105·5 million worth of fraudulent and counterfeit order books and girocheques were recovered, and new performance indicators have been set for this year to improve upon this performance.

Automation

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy in respect of the automated payment of benefits.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Our preferred method of payment is by automated credit transfer directly into bank or building society accounts. However, we recognise that many people prefer to collect their benefit at post offices, and in May my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced our intention to automate the process by which benefits are delivered at post office counters. This is good news for customers, good news for taxpayers and good news for post offices.

Child Poverty

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next intends to meet the Child Poverty Action Group to discuss initiatives to reduce the extent of child poverty in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Burt: Ministers meet regularly with representatives of children's groups, including the Child Poverty Action Group, to discuss a variety of issues affecting children. I last met CPAG on 13 October.

Pensioners

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans exist to incorporate the provisions of the War Pensioners (Equal Rights) Bill within the overall review of differentials between pensions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of the differentials between pensions.

Mr. Roger Evans: There are no plans for such a review.

Pension Trusts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what safeguards will exist under the new proposals to protect employee trustees from dismissal for whistleblowing on any illegitimate action taken by pension trusts.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Were an employee trustee to be dismissed from his employment for whistleblowing he would enjoy the protection afforded by the appropriate provisions contained in existing employment law.

Pension Trusts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the prospective complications posed by the proposed opt-out option for the requirement for compulsory employee trustee elections for pension schemes.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Department of Social Security received 178 replies to its consultation document on the selection and appointment of member-nominated trustees. A majority of respondents supported our proposals that members in all types of schemes should have the right to select one third of the trustees but many were concerned that the arrangements for opt-out, suggested in this document, could prove difficult to operate on a practical level. We are now considering the best way to implement our proposals in the light of these comments.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Hague: Three of the war pensions committees for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible cover parts of the west midlands region, including Shropshire.

Each committee consists of 30 members, appointed for a period of five years. New appointments are due on 1 January 1996. No salary is payable.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Hague: On 1 October 1994, 88,173 full time equivalent staff were employed by the Department of Social Security. The proportions employed in each of the economic planning regions are shown in the table.

Region	Proportion per cent. of Total Staff Employed
Scotland	10
Northern	18
Yorkshire and Humberside	8
North West	21
East Midlands	4
West Midlands	7
Wales	4
East Anglia	2
South East	21
South West	5
Northern Ireland and Overseas	Less than 1

State Pensions

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the latest figure for the number of (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over who are receiving a state pension.

Mr. Arbuthnot: At March 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, a total of 3,561,390 men and 6,690,270 women were in receipt of a state retirement pension[1].Note [1] "State Retirement Pension" means a contributory retirement pension, a non-contributory retirement pension or graduated retirement benefit.

Child Allowance

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of claimants eligible for the new child allowance.

Mr. Burt: We estimate that 150,000 families will benefit from the introduction of the new help with child-care charges in family credit, disability working allowance, housing benefit and council tax benefit. This includes 50,000 taking up work as a direct result of the change.

National Insurance

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the total cost in the full year of widening the nil band of the class 1 employee NIC (contracted in) up to earnings of £100 per week.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The loss of income would be some £1·5 billion in a full year.

Notes:

Employee contributions—assumes that contributions are deducted at 2 per cent. on first £100 of earnings once they exceed the lower earnings limit.

Employer contribution—assumes that the lower earnings limit becomes £100 and that the existing structure of rates and earnings brackets applies above it.

Assumes that band earnings for the purpose of contracting out also begins at £100.

Pensioner Income

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are estimated to have no income other than the statutory retirement pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information is not available on the number of pensioners whose sole income is retirement pension. An estimated 92 per cent. of pensioner couples* and 81 per cent of single pensioners receive income on top of state benefits.

* Pensioner couples are those where the husband is over 65. Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1992.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish the current value of the elderly persons' Christmas bonus if increased to a sum equivalent to the value of £10 in 1977 using the September increase in the RPI to calculate the current value;

(2) if he will publish the cost to the Exchequer of raising the elderly persons' Christmas bonus to 1994 prices and paying the bonus at the new value at Christmas 1994;

(3) whether he will consider increasing the elderly persons' Christmas bonus to a sum equivalent to the value of £10 in 1977 and allowing the annual increases thereafter in line with the increase in the RPI.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Christmas bonus was first introduced in 1972 at the rate of £10 and is paid to about 13·1 million people. No Government have increased the bonus since. The equivalent value of £10 bonus in December 1977 at September 1994 prices is £30.36. The additional cost of raising the bonus from 1977 to 1994 prices would be approximately £267 million. We have no plans to increase the Christmas bonus.

Note: Roundings to nearest 5 pence. Source: The Retail price Index (all items) as published by the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would now be the level of the £10 Christmas bonus paid to retirement pensioners adjusted in line with changes in the RPI since its introduction.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The lump sum £10 Christmas bonus was introduced in December 1972. If it had been increased in line with the movement in the RPI each year since its introduction the rate in December 1994 would be £65.70.

Note:

1: Calculations for each step rounded to the nearest 5p.

2: December 1994 increase based on September 1992 to September 1993 RPI

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of retirement pensioners eligible for the £10 Christmas bonus when introduced in 1973 and its cost to public funds; and what were the comparable figures at December 1993.

Mr. Arbuthnot: When it was first introduced in December 1972, the £10 bonus was paid to approximately 7.8 million retirement pensioners at a cost of £78 million. Comparable figures at December 1993 were 9.8 million retirement pensioners at a cost of £98 million.

Cold Weather Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish the current value of the cold weather allowance if increased to a sum equivalent to the value of £5 in 1986 using the September increase in the RPI to calculate the current value;

(2) if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer of increasing the cold weather allowance to 1994 price levels and paying the allowance at the new level during financial year 1994–95;

(3) whether he will consider increasing the level of payment of cold weather allowance to a sum equivalent to £5 in 1986 and raising the annual increases thereafter in line with the increase in the RPI;

(4) what increases he proposes to the value of the cold weather allowance to compensate for the increases in VAT on fuel costs imposed in the 1993 Budget.

Mr. Roger Evans: Cold weather payments towards the cost of domestic fuel bills will increase to £7 from 1 November 1994 and to £7·50 from 1 November 1995. If the previous payment of £5, originally introduced in December 1986, had been increased using the September value of the fuel and light component of the retail price index the amount would have increased to £6·70 from 1 November 1994–30p less than the actual new payment. Using this alternative payment, the Exchequer would have saved £619,256 this winter, if the same number of cold weather payments were made as last year. As cold weather payments are a contribution towards fuel costs designed to complement day-to-day living expenses met through income support, we have no plans to link these payments with the RPI.

Fire Safety, Quarry House

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 June, Official Report, column 18–19, whether Quarry house, Leeds, has now been issued with a fire safety certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: Following an inspection of Quarry house the Home Office fire inspectorate issued a notice in July 1994 confirming that a fire certificate would be issued a soon as a small number of remedial works had been satisfactorily completed. A limit of six months was set for the completion of the work. It is anticipated that the fire certificate will be issued in January 1995 when the Home Office fire inspector conducts a final inspection of the building.

Lady Mary Hospitality Home

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the full amount of weekly benefit paid to a constituent of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood, details of whom have been supplied to him, during the period 1989 to 1993 when he was registered as living at the Lady Mary hospitality home; if he will include a breakdown of how those payments were made up and how they changed over the period; what were the exact dates he was registered as living at the home; and what payments would have been made to that person if he had been living in accommodation with no care staff, during those periods;

(2) what was the amount of weekly benefit paid to a constituent of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood, details of whom have been supplied to him, (a) during 1992 and early 1993 and (b) between late 1993 and February 1994 when he was registered as living at the Lady Mary hospitality home; if he will publish a breakdown of how those payments were made up; and what were the exact dates he was living at the above home;

(3) what were the exact dates on which the claims of two constituents of the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood, details of whom have been supplied to him, made in 1990 while they were registered as living at the Lady Mary hospitality home (a) started and (b) finished; what account was taken of the circumstances of the accommodation provided when meeting those claims; what was the full amount of weekly benefit over that period to each of those constituents; and how those payments differed from the amount payable in comparable circumstances except that no personal care was provided.

Mr. Roger Evans: It has not been possible to identify the constituent or constituents to whom the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood refers. However, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, Michael Bichard, will be happy to look into this matter and respond in writing if the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood will provide him with further details of the constituents.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims were closed down as a result of each raid at the Lady Mary hospitality home since 1989; when the most recent concern was raised about irregular claims being made from the home; and what action was taken;

(2) how many raids were carried out by the Benefits Agency or others on behalf of his Department at the Lady Mary hospitality home, 13–15 Soho road, Handsworth, Birmingham B19 since 1989; and what were the dates of each raid and the name and grade of the DSS officer conducting each raid;

(3) how may claims were being made from the Lady Mary hospitality home on each occasion it was raided since 1989; and what was the amount of each claim; and in how many of those cases (a) individuals were signing themselves for books or (b) an agent or appointee was being used.

Mr. Roger Evans: There have been three investigations of the Lady Mary hospitality home conducted by DSS officers since 1989, all by fraud investigators. The records of the first of these investigations, which took place in 1989, have been destroyed in accordance with normal procedures. The second investigation took place in October 1990 and resulted in the closure of six claims. The third investigation in 1992 resulted in the closure of 11 claims to benefit. The most recent concerns arose in March 1994 and the evidence available was thoroughly examined.

The fraud area manager currently responsible for investigations in this area is Frank Ashford. It is not our policy to divulge the names of individual investigators.

Sixteen claims were in payment at the time of the second investigation; full details of the amounts of each claim are not available. Twenty-eight claims were in payment at the time of the investigation in 1992. All customers were being paid £181·40 per week, the appropriate residential care rate of income support, except for one resident who was receiving £105·47 per week.

Information is not available to indicate in how many cases individuals were signing order books themselves or by agent or appointee.

Age Allowance

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would now be the level of the 25p a week age allowance for retirement pensioners adjusted in line with changes in the RPI since its introduction.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The 25p age addition to state retirement pension, paid to people who are aged over 80, was introduced in 1971. No Government have increased the age addition since its introduction. If the age addition had been increased in line with the movement in the retail prices index[1] in each year since its introduction the rate payable from April 1994 would have been £1·55[2].

Notes

[1] The retail price index (all items) as published by the Central Statistical Office has been used.

[2] In each step of the calculation the notional payable rate has been rounded to the nearest 5p in line with the normal convention for the up-rating of social security benefits.

EMPLOYMENT

Public Information

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last three years to (a) produce public information in alternative formats for visually impaired people and (b) publicise the availability of accessible information amongst visually impaired people.

Miss Widdecombe: Public information material in alternative formats for visually impaired people is produced for, and on behalf of, the Department from a wide variety of sources within its area of responsibility, including the Employment Service, training and enterprise councils, external contractors providing assessment, rehabilitation and training, and the Department itself. When access to work was launched, many organisations of and for disabled people were contacted directly with details of the programme, and offered materials in standard text, Braille and audio tape. Cost information for the production of that material is not available centrally.

Dissemination methods vary according to what is appropriate to the item. For example, ES materials are made available to visually impaired people through jobcentre and placing, assessment and counselling team services, and through periodic disability advertising campaigns. TECs, local enterprise companies and contractors for rehabilitation and training make local arrangements to publicise materials. There is no comprehensive information centrally available on the costs of publicising the availability of accessible information.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

There are currently 116 appointments of lay members to the Cardiff tribunal;

—and chairmen and members of the following seven committees for the employment of people with disabilities, CEPDs:

Birmingham and Solihull

Coventry and Warwickshire

Dudley and Sandwell

Hereford and Worcester

Shropshire

Staffordshire

Wolverhampton and Wallsall.

Each committee has an independent chairman and up to 14 members.

Appointments, and re-appointments to industrial tribunals are initially for three years. The next round of appointments will take effect in October 1995.

The CEPDs are usually reconstituted every three years, when all appointments are considered afresh. The last reconstitution exercise was completed in 1994.

Lay members of industrial tribunals are paid a fee of £119 for a day's sitting. CEPD chairmen and members are unpaid but may reclaim from the Employment Service travelling and subsistence expenses incurred on approved committee business.

Labour Statistics (Wirral)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were (a) unemployed and (b) economically inactive in each constituency in the Wirral on average in each year since 1979; and if he will publish a breakdown of rates of (a) unemployment and (b) economic inactivity on average in each year since 1979 in the travel-to-work areas covering the Wirral.

Mr. Oppenheim: The numbers of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency and unemployment rates for travel-to-work areas are available monthly from June 1983, on the unadjusted basis. An analysis of economic inactivity by travel-to-work area is available from 1981 census and by parliamentary constituency from the 1981 and 1991 census. All this information can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on how TEC courses are supervised and validated.

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are responsible for the quality and performance of all their suppliers. FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Caribbean

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the offshore financial regulatory arrangements in each of the dependent territories in the Caribbean; what plans he has to change them; what arrangements cover the issue of banking licences; and what EC provisions are applicable.

Mr. Baldry: All the dependent territory Governments are reviewing arrangements for regulation of their offshore financial sectors. We have encouraged this review and are giving it our full support. Its objective is to raise to internationally accepted standards existing levels of regulation across the range of financial services. The effect will be: (a) to prevent criminals and fraudsters from bringing the dependent territories into disrepute, and (b) to increase the attractiveness of dependent territories to legitimate business investors. New offshore bank licensing guidelines have been, or are in the process of being, introduced by each of the dependent territories. These bring dependent territory licensing practice into line with the Basle committee's recommendations on consolidated home state supervision. European Union provisions do not apply.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Ministry of Defence regarding the military utility of anti-personnel mines for the armed forces.

Mr. David Davis: We continue to regard landmines as a legitimate defensive weapon when used responsibly in accordance with the laws of war. We are, however, working with like-minded countries to establish a viable and effective international control regime to ensure the responsible use of anti-personnel landmines. My Department is in regular contact with the Ministry of Defence over this.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Governments of other countries in the European Union regarding the moratorium on the export of anti-personnel mines, in particular regarding the exclusion of self-destruct and self-neutralising mines from the terms of the moratorium introduced by Her Majesty's Government on 27 July.

Mr. David Davis: We have regular discussions with our European Union partners with the aim of developing a viable and effective international control regime for anti-personnel landmines.

China

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by his Department to encourage investment in China.

Mr. Goodlad: The British embassy in Peking, the consulate-general in Shanghai and the China trade unit in Hong Kong work closely with the DTI and the China Britain trade group to provide advice and information to British companies on the Chinese market. When, for example, the largest trade mission ever organised by the China Britain trade group visited China in September, one component specifically studied industrial investment opportunities with the help and support of our posts there.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British industries by turnover are most active in China.

Armenia

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will now open a legation in Yerevan, Armenia, for the protection of British interests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are at present no plans to establish a resident British mission in Yerevan. The pattern of our overseas representation is kept under review. Her Majesty's ambassador in Moscow is accredited to Armenia. He and his staff visit Yerevan regularly.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which location Armenian citizens requiring visas to enter the United Kingdom apply.

Mr. Baldry: Armenian citizens requiring visas to visit the United Kingdom may apply at any post designated to offer a visa service. Those persons wishing to enter the United Kingdom for some other purpose should apply to the British embassy in Moscow. A list of designated posts is available in the Library of the House.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Armenians live in each state of the EU.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not centrally recorded and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of the EU have diplomatic representations with Armenia in Yerevan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Three—France, Germany and Greece.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he assesses would be the cost of operating an embassy in Armenia by renting premises in Yerevan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to give a reliable estimate. Much would depend on the number of staff to be accommodated, the functions to be performed, and the size and location of the premises.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Armenia in each of the past five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Armenia for the year 1993 and from January to August 1994 is shown in the table:

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the relationship between the Russian Government and the Azerbaijan Government and the claims to the oil resources of the Caspian sea in so far as it relates to the activities of oil companies operating from Britain.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We understand that discussions on co-operation in the Caspian sea among the five littoral states, including Russia and Azerbaijan, are continuing. We welcomed the signature on 20 September of a production-sharing agreement between the Azerbaijan state oil company and a consortium including British-based oil companies.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the recent visit to the Caribbean by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State.

Mr. Baldry: I visited the Caribbean from 1–7 October and chaired a meeting of the governors and chief Ministers of the Caribbean dependent territories in Montserrat. I also visited Anguilla, the British Virgin islands and the Turks and Caicos islands. I had constructive meetings in each territory with local Ministers on a wide range of issues of mutual concern.

I also met the British military short-term training team who are currently based in Puerto Rico training the Commonwealth contingent of the multinational force in preparation for duties in Haiti.

China

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the level of (a) British, (b) other EU countries, (c) USA, (d) Australian and (e) Canadian investment in China.

Mr. Goodlad: According to the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Co-operation, figures for cumulative investment in China are as follows:

Hong Kong

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect on Sino—British relations of the disagreements about the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: It is in the clear interests of Hong Kong, China and Britain to draw a line under recent disagreements and to work for an improvement in Sino—British co-operation across the range of bilateral and international issues. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary took this forward with Chinese Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister Qian Qichen during their meeting on 29 September. The governor's annual policy address to Hong Kong's Legislative Council on 5 October underlined our determination to improve co-operation, and set out specific ideas to that end.

Indonesia

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will approach the Indonesian Government to demand the release of Muchtar Pakpakan, the head of Indonesia's leading independent trade union.

Mr. Goodlad: We have made no approach to the Indonesian Government, but European Union heads of mission in Jakarta are monitoring the trial of Mr. Pakpahan, which is still in progress.

South Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to make European Union markets more open to South African goods.

Mr. David Davies: The European Community included South Africa in its generalised system of preferences for the first time from 3 September. This allows a range of South African goods to enter the Community at lower tariffs than before.

The Community has also recently signed a framework agreement with South Africa which establishes a basis for a future relationship. The agreement commits both sides to stepping up co-operation, with an explicit reference to trade.

Discussion on how this commitment is to be honoured in detail is still at an early stage.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the meeting in September between IGADD heads of state and the combatants in the Sudanese war; and what new initiatives are now to be taken.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The fourth round of talks ended in stalemate over the issues of self-determination of Sharia law. The IGADD heads of state remain committed to their peace initiative, which we and the European Union will continue to support.

Indonesia

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 804, what evidence he has that, following the consensus statement, Indonesia is now living up to its human rights obligations.

Mr. Goodlad: We welcome as a positive step the visit to Indonesia and East Timor in July of the UN special rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. We continue to encourage Indonesia to live up to the other commitments made at the last session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

United Nations Day

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what events are planned in the United Kingdom to mark United Nations day on 24 October; and what steps have been taken to publicise these events.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Normally the only way the Government marks United Nations day is by raising flags in Parliament square. As the Secretary-General is in London on the day this year he has agreed to lay a wreath at the Cenotaph.

The pool of photographers were informed of the event on 20 October.

Hospitality Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the members, salaries and occupations of those serving on the Government hospitality fund advisory committee for the purchase of wine.

Mr. Goodlad: Members of the Government hospitality fund advisory committee for the purchase of wine receive no salaries, allowances or expenses. The chairman is Sir Ewen Fergusson, formerly ambassador to France and now employed by Coutts bank. The other four members are all wine experts and either serving or retired wine merchants. It is not normally customary to disclose their names so as to prevent undue lobbying by members of the wine trade. However, the details are:-

1. Major John Surtees, retired wine merchant
2. Mr. Anthony Hanson, wine consultant
3. Mr. Mark Savage, wine merchant
4. Mr. Sebastian Payne, The Wine Society

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what have been the (a) annual budget, (b) annual running costs and (c) annual travel costs of the Government hospitality fund advisory committee for the purchase of wine in each of the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: The chairman and members of the Government hospitality fund advisory committee for the purchase of wine receive neither salaries, allowances nor expenses. The answers are (a) nil—actual purchases of wine are funded separately (b) about £1,500 a year (c) nil.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Naveed Ahmed, the husband of Mrs. Shahida Naz, of Bradford, is to be issued by the post in Islamabad with a visa enabling him to join his wife in the United Kingdom following the withdrawal by the Home Office of their application to the immigration appeal tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have asked the entry clearance officer in Islamabad to let me have a report on the application from Mr. Naveed Ahmed to join his wife Mrs. Shahida Naz in the United Kingdom. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of the European Parliament each year since 1989–90; and what amount is included in the draft budget for 1995.

Mr. David Davis: The outturn for expenditure by the European Parliament each year form 1989–93 (ecu/£ sterling) was:

Year	ecu	£

1993 £1=1·2845

The 1994 figures are converted at the rate of £1= 1·3243, which is the rate set for United Kingdom VAT and fourth resource contributions to the 1994 Community budget.

The 1995 figures are converted at the rate of £1= 1·2732, the rate notified in the Official Journal as prevailing on the last working day of last month (30 September 1994).

South Africa

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of South Africa regarding allegations of sales of arms by British companies to the former South African Government in breach of the UN arms embargo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No such discussions have taken place. Britain conscientiously enforced the UN arms embargo and related European and Commonwealth restrictions. At no time did we knowingly authorise any company to export defence equipment to South Africa, and any reports of British companies breaching the embargo were rigorously investigated by the appropriate authorities.

TREASURY

Ministers (Severance Payments)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount spent on severance payments to those who have resigned, retired or been dismissed from ministerial office for each year since 1990.

Mr. Aitken: The Prime Minister explained on 7 December 1993 Official Report, columns 142–43 in his reply to an earlier question from the hon. Member that no composite list then existed of severance payments made under the Parliamentary Pensions Act 1984 and the Ministerial and Other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991.

The Treasury instituted a composite record of such payments with effect from 1 January 1994 on the basis of written confirmation from individual Departments. Since that date, the record shows that the total amount expended on severance payments in accordance with the terms of the relevant Act has been £131,776·75.

Government Expenditure

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the latest estimate of the outturn of general Government expenditure for 1994–95 analysed by function as in table 1.2 of Cm. 2519.

Mr. Aitken: Following the usual practice, estimates of general Government expenditure for 1994–95 in total and a breakdown of the control total by Department will be published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report on 29 November 1994. A full functional breakdown of general Government expenditure as in table 1.2 of Cm. 2519 will be published in the statistical supplement in February 1995. The most recent published estimate of total general Government expenditure for 1994–95 was £291·6 billion, in the Treasury summer economic forecast published on 28 June 1994.

Construction Industry

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the construction industry.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer met the export group for the constructional industries on 21 September this year.

European Union (Membership Cost)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now publish a calculation of the cost to the average family per week of the United Kingdom's membership of the European Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The calculation of the budgetary cost to the average family of United Kingdom membership of the European Union is as follows:

Weekly net contributions per family[1]

Year	Number
1992	2·63
1994	1·75

Those calculations relate to the net direct budgetary cost of United Kingdom membership. They do not reflect the wider benefits and costs of United Kingdom membership. They do not reflect the wider benefits and costs of United Kingdom membership of the European Union.

Negative Equity

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of house purchasers with negative equity on their homes.

Mr. Nelson: House prices have clearly increased since their trough in the first half of 1993, reducing negative equity. The latest estimate from the Bank of England is that in the third quarter of 1994, 1,096,000 households had negative equity. This represents a fall of 678,000 households, or over 38 per cent. compared with the first quarter of 1993.

Maintenance Payments

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue staff have received specific training on the effects of the changes to the tax treatment of maintenance payments, introduced in the Finance Act 1988, and the option to elect to stay with the previous regime.

Sir George Young: Statistics are not available centrally. However, the Inland Revenue provides appropriate information and training for all staff who deal with the tax treatment of maintenance payments.

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are subject to the special transitional rules for the tax treatment of maintenance payments, introduced by the Finance Act 1988.

Sir George Young: It is estimated that about 210,000 people paying maintenance are subject to the special transitional rules.

VAT

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will make a statement regarding the continuation of the exemption of the United Kingdom from the European Union's sixth VAT directive (77/3881 EEC) after 31 December 1996.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The sixth VAT directive lays down the common system for VAT throughout the European Union and has been adopted by all member states, including the United Kingdom. With effect from 1 January 1993, the directive was amended to allow a transitional system for VAT to be introduced for the single market. That system will continue until the end of 1996, when it is planned to introduce a definitive VAT regime. Failing unanimous agreement among member states on what this regime should be, the present arrangements will continue.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will continue to make it his policy that a trader should receive a visit from Customs and Excise within the first three years of registering for VAT.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise is committed to ensuring that businesses new to VAT are given an opportunity to learn about the tax and their responsibilities in the three years following VAT registration. They will continue to keep the best means of ensuring this under review.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the meeting of the IMF on 16 September relating to the continued membership of Sudan and its judgment about the economic policy being pursued by Sudan.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The IMF's executive board decided on 16 September that it would not recommend a vote of governors of the IMF on the compulsory withdrawal of Sudan from the IMF. It decided to consider further the issue, and Sudan's programme, by 15 January 1995 or at the time it considers Sudan's 1994 article IV consultation, whichever is the earlier.

Severance Payments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish details of each of the list of severance payments deemed to be illegal or outside appropriate limits as described in the memorandum dated 10 August from the NHS executive to the Treasury showing what action is now being taken in each case.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the written reply that my hon. Friend the Minister for Health gave him earlier today.

National Health Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the financing rules on capital programmes within the NHS.

Mr. Jonathan Aitken [holding answer 21 October 1994]: The financial framework within which the NHS is required to operate is set out in "Government Accounting". Detailed guidance, such as the NHS trusts finance manual, on the rules governing the financing of capital projects in the health service is supplied by the NHS executive. Copies of "Government Accounting" and the NHS trusts finance manual are available in the Library.

HEALTH

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 October, what costs have been incurred in consultancy work related to the study of OPCS market testing; and what assumptions have been made regarding on-going security costs in the event of the contract being awarded to the private sector.

Mr. Sackville: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is market testing its computer mainframe service. Consultancy costs of £1,000 have been incurred to date. The Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency is providing OPCS with procurement assistance at an estimated cost of up to £50,000. The in-house bid team will require consultancy help estimated at £35,000.

When issued, the statement of service requirement for this market test, will contain a mandatory requirement to provide security at a level to maintain OPCS's reputation for careful guardianship of data in its care. All potential contractors will have to take this factor into account when submitting tenders, with a full breakdown of costs.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the public appointments for which she is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Malone: A full answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health makes the following appointments to national health service bodies in the west midlands area:

Body	Appointments made by Secretary of State	Annual rates of remuneration for chairmen
Regional health authorities	Chairman and 5 non-executives per board	£20,925

The annual rate of remuneration for all non-executives is £5,000.
Each appointment is for a period of up to four years.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a current list of the chairmen and non-executive directors of each NHS trust.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide an up-to-date list of all the (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each trust board indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Malone: Many chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts are currently being considered for reappointment. This process will be finished by the end of November. An up-to-date list of appointees will be placed in the Library as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what expenditure has been incurred on NHS trust chairs, non-executive directors, committee members and sub-committee members for (a) travelling allowances, (b) overnight absence allowances and (c) day subsistence allowances in each year since 1990–91;

(2) what expenditure has been incurred in each region on NHS trust chairs, non-executive directors, committee members and sub-committee members for (a) travelling allowances, (b) overnight absence allowances and (c) day subsistence allowances in each year since 1990–91.

Mr. Malone: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many company secretaries have been appointed by NHS trusts.

Mr. Malone: It is a matter for each individual trust to decide how they ensure proper corporate control of financial and other business. The number of company secretaries appointed to national health service trusts is not available centrally.

Child Care Staff

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest available figures for changes in the number of appropriately qualified staff working in residential care since the publication of the Utting report on children in public care.

Mr. Kirwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the number of appropriately qualified staff working in residential child care since the publication of the Utting report.

Mr. Bowis: The Utting report found that 21 per cent. of all officers in charge of residential children's homes had no relevant qualification. We introduced the residential child care initiative in 1992 to assist authorities to achieve the Utting recommendation that all officers in charge should be professionally qualified by 1995. Under this initiative, the Department is funding 465 places on special DipSW programmes. In addition, the training support programme is available to support the costs of training all social services staff, including those in residential children's homes.

Local authorities social services departments are responsible for ensuring that all heads of residential homes for children are qualified and appropriately trained. Their policies and practice on staff recruitment and retention have a considerable influence on this objective.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to ensure a significant expansion of training for residential child care staff.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will list the fresh initiatives she proposes to take to assure a major expansion of training for residential child care staff; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Government attach great importance to the training of all social services staff who work with children, particularly those in the residential sector. This year the Department is providing £15·4 million under the training support programme for the training of staff working in the child care field. This includes £4 million specifically earmarked for the residential child care initiative, for the professional training of officers in charge of residential children's homes. New occupational standards covering staff in residential child care settings will be available from next spring.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps (a) she has taken and (b) proposes to take to implement the recommendations of the Utting and Warner reports.

Mr. Bowis: Progress on the implementation of recommendations in the Utting and Warner reports is reported annually in the Children Act reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to publish her document on the merit award system for consultants.

Mr. Malone: Very shortly.

Social Work Students

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made as to the adequacy of the daily placement fee budget available to CCETSW and its implications for voluntary and independent sector social work student placements.

Mr. Bowis: The Department gives the Central Council for the Education and Training of Social Work—CCETSW—a budget to support practice learning. The amount assigned to the daily placement fees budget is one element of this, the size of which is for CCETSW to determine within the total allocated for practice learning. The Department continues to work with CCETSW on the provision of student placements in all sectors. Moreover, the Department has set aside £700,000 of the training support grant to local authorities to make additional practice placements available in 1994–95. This has been warmly welcomed by them.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will arrange for an inquiry to be conducted into the use of pituitary derived hormones and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in line with the one being conducted by the Federal Government of Australia; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease—CJD—is a rare but fatal disease. The Government acted promptly in 1985 when evidence of an association between the pituitary derived hormone programmes and CJD first became available. All treatment programmes were brought to an end. As many patients as possible have been traced. Expert counselling and information are available to them, and many patients have used these services. The treatment programme is currently the subject of litigation. We have no plans to set up an inquiry.

Hospitals (Video Surveillance)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce regulations concerning the use in hospitals of covert video surveillance in child protection.

Mr. Sackville: The particular security measures which are appropriate to individual hospitals are the responsibility of local management.

Blood

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on the regional and local availability of blood from blood banks under the control of the National Blood Authority;

(2) what assessment she has made of the proposed revision of distribution arrangements by the National Blood Authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority is responsible for co-ordinating the activities of the National Blood Service in order to meet the demand from hospitals for blood, both nationally and locally. The authority has made proposals for reorganisation of the National Blood Service and these are out for consultation. The National Blood Authority plans to have a network of stockholding units around the country so that it can maintain supply at its present level and improve it wherever possible. The results of the consultation will be carefully considered before decisions are made.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many places blood donor sessions were held in each year since 1987; in how many places sessions are expected to take place in 1995 and 1996; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Under the National Blood Authority's proposals to improve the national blood service, blood collection will continue, as at present, to be easily accessible to donors. Collection teams would be larger and locally based, rather than all operating from the transfusion centres as at present. All major population areas would be covered. In 1992 there were 19,000 blood donor sessions. The number of blood donor session locations is not available centrally.

Dental Services

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the figures for the number of patients who were registered with dental practices in Devon and Cornwall in (a) July 1992 and (b) July 1994.

Mr. Malone: This information is shown in the table.

Trained Children's Nurses Survey

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answers of 11 May, Official Report, column 160, 19 May, Official Report, column 559, and 21 April, Official Report, column 160, when she expects to announce the publication of the results of the survey of trained children's nurses conducted by the NHS Executive.

Mr. Malone: We hope to respond to all the recommendations in the Allitt inquiry report shortly.

Severance Payments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of each of the list of severance payments deemed to be illegal or outside appropriate limits as described in the memorandum dated 10 August 1994 from the NHS Executive to the Treasury, indicating what action is now being taken in each case.

Mr. Malone: The National Health Service Executive is, with the Treasury, examining each payment. It would not be appropriate to publish details while this examination is in progress.

Mr. Bowis: The Department does not hold this information.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent to which patients of (a) GP fundholders and (b) non-fundholders make use of private medical insurance.

Mr. Malone: None.

Hospices

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospice beds there have been in each health authority area in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information is shown in the table.

General Practitioners

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent to which (a) GP fundholders and (b) non-fundholding GPs make use of emergency hospital admissions.

Mr. Malone: As part of our plans for developing national health service purchasing, we shall be reviewing contracting for emergency admissions in a number of sites, including the use general practioners make of these services.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been removed from (a) general practitioners' fundholding practice registers and (b) non-general practitioners' fundholding practices in each of the last three years.

Mr. Malone: All general practitioners are bound by the requirements of their terms of service when removing patients from their list. Data collected by family health services authorities on patient movement between general practioners does not separately identify the fundholding status of the doctor.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce a statutory obligation on fundholders to publish their accounts.

Mr. Malone: General practioner fundholders are already required under section 98(2B)(c) of the National Health Service Act 1977, as amended by Section 20(2)(b) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, to produce annual accounts to the relevant family health services authority. These accounts are public documents and are available on request.

Mr. Sackville: Data for 1993–94 will not be available until the end of November when health authorities and trusts' annual accounts will have been received and summarised. I will write to the hon. Member with this information when it is available.

Pinderfields Hospital Trust

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require a report from the Pinderfields hospital trust as to the reasons for the inability to provide the service of an anaesthetist in certain circumstances within their obstetric care.

Mr. Sackville: This is a local matter for Pinderfields Hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Roy Cusworth, the chairman of the trust.

A change in data collection procedures in September 1993 have since been updated. A change in data collection procedures in September 1993 resulted in the recategorisation as managers of many staff who would have been coded as "others" in the 1991 and 1992 censuses.

Health Service Administration

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 220, if she is now able to publish a table showing the total amount spent on administration by (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) special health authorities, (d) family health service authorities, (e) trusts, and (f) the Department of Health/NHS executive in 1993–94 in each case breaking the figure down to show expenditure on (i) salaries and wages and (ii) establishment expenses.

Mr. Malone: Expenditure on Department of Health administration, including national health service executive administration in 1993–94, was £251 million, of which £117 million was on salaries and wages. Information on the 1993–94 expenditure of NHS bodies will not be available until December 1994.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 219, if she will list the number of managers and administrative staff that have been employed by each regional health authority in 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected quarterly. Information for 1993–94 was published in June 1994—"Patient Transport Services—1993–94—Summary Information from Form KA34—England copies of which are available in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Vacant Land

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who owns the vacant ground to the rear of the footway at the northern junction of High street with Harbour road, Ballyhalbert; and if he will make a statement about this vacant plot.

Mr. Moss: The Department of the Environment does not own the land or have any record of who does and, therefore, I have no comment to make.

Road Widening

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals there are to widen the Harbour road, Ballyhalbert from the High street junction in the northern direction; what consultations there will be with the local community; when the scheme will commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: There are no proposals to widen that section of road. A scheme to provide a footway on the inland side of the road is planned for the current financial year. The proposal has been discussed with the Ballyhalbert community association and further discussions will be held when the detailed design of the scheme has been finalised.

Livestock Marketing

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure in each of the past two years by the Northern Ireland Livestock Marketing Commission; and how much in each of those two years was expended by the Commission in promoting the marketing of red meat (a) outside Northern Ireland and (b) to the internal Northern Ireland market.

Mr. Ancram: The Livestock Marketing Commission, now the Livestock and Meat Commission, incurred expenditure of £1,139,002 in 1992–93, of which £81,378 was spent on promoting the marketing of red meat—£14,421 outside Northern Ireland and £66,957 within Northern Ireland. The corresponding figures for 1993–94 are expenditure of £1,036,007 of which £107,304 was spent on promotion—£61,766 outside Northern Ireland and £45,538 within Northern Ireland.

Further information on the commission's income and expenditure is available in the commission's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Structural Funds Assistance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place a copy of the single programming document for the spending of European Union structural funds assistance in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: The single programming document is being published by the European Commission and is expected to be available shortly. I shall make arrangements for a copy to be placed in the Library as soon as possible thereafter.

Bill of Rights

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received concerning the issue of a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir. Patrick Mayhew: No further representations have been received since I answered a similar question from the hon. Member on 26 May 1994, Official Report, column 294.

Opsahl Report

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the recommendations contained in the Opsahl report he has accepted; if it is his intention to issue a formal response to the report; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Government recognise the value of the submissions made to the commission by a large number of individuals and organisations. The recommendations made by the commission are wide ranging and are addressed to various groups and bodies, not just to the Government. Accordingly, we have no plans to make a formal response to the report. The commission's main political recommendation is based on the assumption that the talks process has failed. The Government do not accept this premise and remain firmly committed to the political talks process which we believe provides the best opportunity of achieving a widely acceptable political accommodation addressing all the relevant relationships.

Hualon Corporation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which firm of consultants was commissioned to prepare a confidential report on the implications of the application of the Hualon Corporation for a grant of £61 million for the opening of new facilities in Northern Ireland; when that report was received by his Department; whether, upon what date, and upon what authority sections of the report have been quoted by officials to representatives of the press, and how any such quoted sections were selected; and if he will now make available copies of that report both to the Library and to the Committee of Public Accounts.

Mr. Ancram: The consultants commissioned were Kurt Salmon Associates Ltd. Three separate reports were received—technical review, October 1992, preliminary market report, April 1993, and market assessment report, December 1993.

There have been no quotes by officials to representatives of the press. However, relevant extracts from those reports were quoted by my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) in the Financial Times of 3 June 1994 in response to that newspapers's coverage of the project on 31 May 1994.

Those reports contain commercially confidential information and will not therefore be made available in the Library. Should the Public Accounts Committee decide to examine the project and call for the information, then a decision will be made as to the availability of the reports at that time.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inquiries he has made of the Taiwanese authorities about charges recently reported as having been filed against individuals associated with member companies of the Hualon group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: From the information available, confirmed by a press statement issued by the Hualon Corporation on 11 October, none of those arrested for alleged violation of the Taiwan stock exchange regulations is employed by the corporation, which is a totally separate entity to the suspended brokerage houses.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland upon which date, and in what sum, the first payment is expected to be made to the Hualon Corporation in connection with the proposed grant to the corporation for the development of new textile facilities in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The timing and amount of the first grant payment cannot be determined at this stage. It will depend, inter alia, on a number of prepayment conditions being satisfied by the company, the factory construction period and the delivery of the equipment for the first phase.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the textile companies, trade unions or textile employers' organisations which have to date welcomed the proposed grant to the Hualon Corporation in connection with the development of new textile facilities in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The General and Municipal Boilermakers Union in Northern Ireland has publicly said it is "very very pleased" to see jobs on the projected scale and the technology coming to Northern Ireland. There has also been a widespread welcome for the project and the prospect of 1,800 jobs not only from the people of north and west Belfast but across the political spectrum.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has concerning the type of looms which the Hualon Corporation is intending to purchase for use in the facilities in Northern Ireland for which it has been awarded a £61 million grant; what steps he has taken to check with the manufacturers of those looms Hualon's assertion that they will be running at 20 per cent. more than the normal speed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not possible to disclose details of the type of equipment to be purchased. However, during the course of the expert consultant's examination it was confirmed that Hualon was already running looms at up to 20 per cent. above the norm with no apparent increase in down time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Payment-by-results

40. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to introduce a payment-by-results scheme for hon. Members.

Mr. Newton: Substantial structural changes have in the past normally been made only following a report from the Senior Salaries Review Body or its predecessors, and I have no plans to ask them to examine a system of the kind the hon. Member seems to have in mind.

36. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what responsibilities he has in relation to methods of payment-by-results for hon. Members.

Mr. Newton: Motions concerning the pay of hon. Members are brought before the House in my name. However, substantial structural changes have in the past normally been made only following a report from the Senior Salaries Review Body or its predecessors, and I have no plans to ask it to examine a system of the kind that the hon. Member seems to have in mind.

Parliamentary Recesses

39. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received in the past four months concerning the length of parliamentary recesses.

Mr. Newton: In the past four months I have received one oral and one written representation from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East concerning the length of parliamentary recess.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he will send a substantive response to the letter from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, sent on 29 July and acknowledged on 3 August, concerning parliamentary recesses.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East on 18 October. I regret the delay in doing so.

Westminster Hall

29. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the chairman of the Finances Westminster Hall and Services Committee, what financial provision is being made for greater use of Westminster Hall by the public.

Mr. Channon: Following approval by the House of the Catering Committee's report on refreshment provision for Line of Route visitors, plans for a temporary souvenir kiosk in Westminster Hall are being developed and have been agreed by the authorities which control the Hall. Financial provision will depend on a detailed feasibility study which has yet to be considered by my Committee.

Television Link

33. Mr. Dickens: To ask the right hon. member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what financial resources have been earmarked for this and the next financial year to enable hon. Members whose offices are in the Palace of Westminster to enjoy the same television facility linking them with annunciator messages and the House of Commons Chamber in the same way as those hon. Members in newly equipped offices.

Mr. Beith: Cabling of the Palace itself for the "clean feed" is being undertaken as part of the installation of the parliamentary data and video network, for which provision of some £100,000 and £1 million have been allocated in the current and next financial years.

Ibbs Report

30. Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if the Commissioner will review the working of the recommendations of the Ibbs report.

Mr. Beith: The Commission has no plans to carry out an overall review as proposed by the hon. Member, but individual areas of the House's services are studied as appropriate by the Finance and Services Committee and individual domestic committees.

SCOTLAND

Sheep

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the population of sheep in Scotland (a) at the latest available date, (b) 10 years ago and (c) 20 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Information in the form requested is not held centrally.

Forestry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that the Forestry Commission make money available for the buying back of leasehold forestry land.

Sir Hector Monro: The Government are providing almost £1 million per annum to allow the Forestry Commission to buy the freeholds of its leased woodlands where this would offer significant access and recreation benefits.

Mr. Morley : To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his policy that the Forestry Commission will pay the legal costs for local authorities seeking access agreements on privately owned forestry land.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission will be prepared to meet the reasonable legal costs incurred by local authorities in making access agreements for commission woodlands which are to be sold into private ownership.

St. Andrew's Day

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will request Her Majesty the Queen to proclaim St. Andrew's day a bank holiday under section 1(3) of the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have no proposals for making St Andrew's Day a bank holiday.

Fishing Guidelines

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his guidelines for fishermen on how to deal with (a) reptiles and (b) endangered species of turtles in Scottish waters.

Sir Hector Monro: Scottish Natural Heritage is considering the possibility of measures which could contribute to the safe passage of turtles in our national waters. A recent study conducted for SNH by Herpetofauna Consultants International considered reports of turtles in Scottish waters from biological record centres, local museums, fishermen and other sources. The results suggest that turtles are more common around the coast than was previously thought. It is considered that they may have strayed from their migration paths or followed prey along oceanic currents.

SNH, in a news release on 4 October, announced these findings and called for further information from anybody who has sighted turtles. SNH proposes to design appropriate measures once as full a picture as possible has been drawn. My right hon. Friend will be happy to consider any recommendations for turtles and other reptiles.

All marine turtles are fully protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Barlinnie Prison

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proposals he has concerning the modification of the rules governing the operation of the special unit at HM prison, Barlinnie; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what formal training is undertaken by prison officers in relation to service in the special unit, HM prison, Barlinnie; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many prisoners have spent part of their sentences in the special unit, HM prison, Barlinnie over the past 15 years; what was the average length of time served in the unit; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is the average length of service a prison officer serves in the special unit, HM prison, Barlinnie; and what proposals he has to modify such service;

(5) how many prison governors have been placed in charge of the special unit, HM prison, Barlinnie, in the past 15 years; what was the average length of service of such personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subjects of these questions relate to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E.W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman dated 24 October 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Questions about the Barlinnie Special Unit. These concerned the rules governing the operation of the Unit, the training of staff, the average length of time served by prisoners in the Unit, the average length of time prison officers serve in the Unit, and the number of governors in charge of the Unit in the past 15 years

Following the report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, which was published in March this year, an internal Scottish Prison Service Working Party was set up to review the operation of the Barlinnie Special Unit. Its remit was subsequently extended to address recommendations made by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector in respect of the Shotts Unit.

The Working Party has recently completed its work and its findings will require very careful consideration. I hope, however, that it will be possible to take decisions about the Units shortly.

So far as training is concerned, there is at present no formal Unit-specific training programme for staff, but staff are required to apply for Unit posts, and there is a rigorous selection process to ensure that suitable personnel are posted. The Scottish Prison Service provides a wide programme of training for staff in general, including Unit staff, and courses in group work, managing aggression, and influencing skills are among the training which has been undertaken by current members of staff. All Barlinnie Unit staff have completed an accredited counselling course. The selection and training of staff are among the issues which the internal Working Party, to which I have already referred, has considered.

You asked about the number of prisoners who have spent part of their sentences in the Barlinnie Special Unit over the past 15 years and the average length of time served in the Unit. Over the past 15 years a total of 23 prisoners have spent part of their sentence in the Unit, and the average length of time served there is three years seven months.

So far as officers are concerned the average length of service in the Unit of current staff is approximately three years.

In the past 15 years the Barlinnie Special Unit has had eight Governors in charge, including the present Governor, who was appointed in late March 1994. Excluding the present Governor the average length of Governor in charge appointment in that 15 year period has been two years and two months.

Local Authority Ombudsman

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to modify the role, functions and powers of the local authority ombudsman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The powers of the Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland, the local government ombudsman, are kept under review in the light of changing circumstances.

Specific provision is included in the local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill to extend the commissioner's jurisdiction, for non-contractual activities, to the new Srathclyde passenger transport authority. In addition, powers are being taken in the Bill to extend the Commission's jurisdiction to cover residuary bodies, if required.

Health Care International

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has reached on the viability of Health Care International as a private hospital.

Mr. Stewart: It would be inappropriate for my right hon. Friend to speculate publicly on the viability of this or any other private company.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on attempts to attract patients to Health Care International from (a) Spain, (b) Italy, (c) Turkey, (d) Egypt, (e) Morocco and (f) other European, American, North African and middle eastern countries.

Mr. Stewart: This information is commercially confidential to the company.

Health Treatment Abroad

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the current size of the worldwide market in people willing to travel abroad for health treatments; what was the size of the market in 1987; what proportion of that market in 1987 and currently has been won by French healthcare firms; and what assessments he has made of the factors which make French bids more competitive.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend's health responsibilities extend only to Scotland.

Lung Cancer

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the figures for lung cancer by gender in each of the health board areas in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table shows the numbers of registrations of cancer of the trachea, bronchus and lung by sex, health board of residence at the time of diagnosis and year of diagnosis, for the period 1988–94.

Highlands and Islands Veterinary Services Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his officials will meet representatives of the British Veterinary Association and highland veterinary practices to discuss the highlands and islands veterinary services scheme.

Sir Hector Monro: My officials are still considering what changes need to be made to the scheme. Once this has been done, they will meet representatives of the veterinary profession to consider the way forward.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Channel Islands

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has made to the Governments of Jersey and Guernsey regarding the transfer of funds from Iran to the IRA.

Mr. Howard: Any allegations that funds have been transferred to the IRA by foreign states are a matter of grave concern. They are always followed up by the relevant agencies who receive full co-operation from the island authorities whenever they need it. It would not be right for me to go into detail on specific cases, but I have had no need to make representations to the island authorities on the matter to which the hon. Member refers.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the greatest number of prisoner nights spent in police cells by any prisoner in 1994 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Public Information

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last three years to (a) produce public information in alternative formats for visually impaired people and (b) publicise the availability of accessible information among visually impaired people.

Mr. Howard: The following is my Department's spend on producing public information for visually impaired people in each of the past three years:

1992–93	93,000
1993–94	165,280

My Department does not cost the work done by crime prevention officers, fire officers or others to publicise the availability of material. To gather such data would not be cost-effective.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate which departmental publications are currently available (a) in Braille, (b) in large print and (c) on tape; and if he will indicate what efforts have been made by his Department to inform visually impaired people about the availability of publications in alternative formats to normal print.

Mr. Howard: My Department publishes the following printed material in large print:

Fire Safety advice for disabled people

Don't Lose Your Vote

In doubt? Keep Them Out (warning against bogus callers)

The following audio tapes are available:

Make a Difference (about voluntary services)

Fire Safety in the Home

Practical Ways to Crack Crime—the Family Guide

My Department has not produced material in Braille but would consider requests to do so.

Crime prevention material is ordered and distributed by local police crime prevention officers. Blind or partially sighted people may obtain copies free of charge by contacting their local police. My Department's crime prevention publicity catalogue lists the availability of material for blind and partially sighted people.

Fire safety material is promoted through all libraries in England and Wales which have large print sections; the RNIB; health authorities; social services; talking newspapers; and citizens advice bureaux. The material is also provided at local level by fire brigades.

The RNIB has been informed about the availability of "Don't Lose Your Vote" and "Make a Difference".

Salford Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the timetable for the site purchase, planning, building and opening of the proposed new prison in Salford;

(2) whether the proposed new prison at Salford will be planned, built and run by private sector companies.

(3) how many prisoners will be held at the proposed new prison at Salford, announced on 18 October.

(4) whether the proposed new prison in Salford, announced on 18 October, will be one of the six new prisons announced by the Home Secretary in October 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the announcement on 18 October by the Prison Service of plans to build a new category B prison in Greater Manchester.

Discussions are taking place about the purchase of the site and about the planning implications, but a formal planning notice has not yet been submitted to the relevant planning authority, Salford City Council. Subject to the outcome of these discussions, it is envisaged that tenders could be invited for the prison's construction by the summer of 1995, which would enable the prison to open before the end of the financial year 1998–99.

Our initial assessment is that the site is large enough to accommodate up to 800 prisoners, but the level of occupancy will be one of the issues for discussion with the planning authority.

This will be one of the six prisons announced by the Home Secretary on 2 September 1993, for which the design, construction, management and finance will be contracted out to the private sector.

Criminal Justice

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to introduce a system similar to the three-strikes-and-out rule in criminal justice in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: It has always been our policy that, except in the special case of murder, it should be for the courts to decide the appropriate sentence in individual cases within the maximum sentence set by Parliament. We will of course, however, watch developments in penal policy in the United States with interest, and take careful note of any lessons that emerge.

Crown Courts

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to allow police authorities to charge against Crown court budgets for the use of police officer time in attending Crown courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No. The Government have no plans to introduce such charges.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make more efficient use of police time in attending Crown courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The police research study group report "Court Attendance by Police Officers" identified a number of good practices which could lead to the more efficient use of officer time at court. These will be taken forward through the pre-trial issues steering group whose members include representatives from the Home Office, police, Crown Prosecution Service and the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Pre-Trial Hearings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress towards making disclosures by the defence match disclosures by the prosecution in all pre-trial hearings.

Mr. Maclean: I am not at present in a position to add to what was said on this matter earlier this year in the interim Government response to the report of the Royal Commission on criminal justice. The Government are inclined to think that it will be necessary to introduce a new statutory regime to govern both prosecution and defence disclosure, but I cannot yet announce whether or when proposals for legislation will be introduced.

Prisoners (Telephone Calls)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current arrangements for prisoners of category B security status or lower, with regard to private telephone calls.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison

Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the current arrangements for private telephone calls by prisoners of category B status or lower.

Following the installation of cardphones in all establishments, prisoners may make private telephone calls in accordance with guidance to Governors set out in Circular Instruction 21/92. A copy of this is in the House of Commons Library. All calls are paid for by prisoners through the purchase of phonecards.

Only in exceptional compassionate circumstances where it is not appropriate to use a cardphone, or where there is an urgent need to contact a legal or consular representative, are prisoners allowed to use official telephones. For foreign nationals only, the Prison Service Operating Standards provide they may be permitted a short call of no more than five minutes duration once a month to their home country using an official telephone, if they have not received a visit from either family or friends in the preceding month.

Under the guidelines in Circular Instruction 50/88 on the use of official telephones, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library, prisoners are normally expected to pay for calls made on an official telephone. This is except where the amount involved does not justify the effort of collection, or where the Governor is satisfied that the inmate has insufficient funds to meet the cost of the call.

Prison Job Clubs

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what (a) number and (b) percentage of released prisoners have found jobs as a result of the work of prison job clubs at the latest available date;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of prison job clubs, as compared with job clubs outside prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions on the number and percentage of released prisoners who have found jobs as a result of the work of prison job clubs, and on what assessment has been made of the effectiveness of prison job clubs, as compared with those outside prisons.

Information on the number and percentage of released prisoners who have found jobs as a result of the work of prison job clubs is not collected centrally at present and there are currently no plans to do so. Figures have, however, been obtained from the Employment Service in respect of the job clubs at Holloway and Pentonville Prisons covering the months of April to August this year. They show that, of the 27 prisoners who used the Holloway job club 12 (45 per cent.) found jobs. At Pentonville 46 prisoners used the job club and 30 (66 per cent.) found jobs. These figures compare with a rate of approximately 45 per cent. for job clubs in the community.

The Prison Service has made no comparative assessment of the effectiveness of prison job clubs. However, following their establishment in 1991 with assistance from the Employment Service of job clubs in the two London prisons mentioned earlier, the Employment Service carried out its own evaluation. This concluded that prison job clubs can provide effective help in getting jobs for people nearing release from prison. On that basis the Prison Service has, together with the Employment Service and other organisations, continued to develop further jobsearch assistance for prisoners.

Increasing the number of establishments operating prison job clubs to at least eleven by next April is one of a number of initiatives aimed at this. This is in keeping with the commitment in the Prison Service's "Statement of Purpose, Visions, Goals and Values" to help prisoners prepare for their release into the community.

Hostels

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the composited report on national conditions in hostels which was undertaken by the central building services unit.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Each hostel in the survey has received its own report and assessment, and a report of general findings will be sent to probation and voluntary managing committees by the end of the year.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what criteria were used by his Department in drawing up the A, B and C lists of hostels derived from the hostel conditions survey;

(2) if he will publish the A, B and C lists of hostels which have been derived from the hostel conditions survey.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The main criteria for the three lists were the amount of space per resident, the proportion of single rooms, running costs and the likely costs of repairs and refurbishment to bring the hostel to an acceptable standard.

The three lists are as follows:

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources will be given to the police to deal with the enforcement of summonses and warrants issued for the non-compliance of community orders and hostel rules.

Mr. Maclean: No specific additional resources will be provided for this work. General police funding covers all operational activities and it is for chief officers to prioritise tasks, taking account of the resources available.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if hostel occupancy figures are determined by beds committed or beds occupied overnight.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Hostel occupancy is measured by beds occupied as a proportion of total approved places.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the hostels on the A list, drawn up from the hostel conditions survey, will be disposed of.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Home Office is discussing the future of List A hostels with the probation committees and voluntary management committees concerned. Although the buildings concerned may not have a long term future, they may be able to operate satisfactorily for some time.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the occupancy rate for the hostels at (a) Cecil road, Boscombe, (b) Walmer villas, Bradford, (c) Cardigan house, Leeds, (d) Howden house, Leeds, (e) Canning house, Liverpool, (f) Westbourne house, London E7, (g) Shenley road, London SE5, (h) Bedford hill, London SW12, (i) The Stone house, Northamptonshire, (j) Lawson house, Plymouth, (k) the Grange, Purbrook, (l) Elizabeth Fry, Reading and (m) Wellesley house, Windsor, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The occupancy rate of these hostels for the month of August 1994 is set out. Shenley road, London SE5 and Bedford hill, London SW12, whilst being two separate properties, constitute a single hostel known as Bedford/Shenley probation/bail hostel.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of places available in bail hostels; and what will be the number in 12 months' time.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There are at present 2,474 places available. Following the 1993 public expenditure survey, provision was planned for an increase to 2,560 by 31 March next year and 2,680 by 31 March 1996: these plans are subject to review in the current survey.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources will be made available to hostels on the B list, drawn up from the hostel conditions survey, to assist them with refurbishment.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Home Office plans to finance the refurbishment of these hostels as resources permit. A capital grant budget is maintained for the refurbishment or redevelopment of approved hostels premises or sites: provision in the current financial year is £4 million.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of persons accepted for hostel places are actually remanded into custody.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Figures on this are not held centrally.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice and assistance will be given to hostel managers to increase successful completion rates for hostel residents from 48 to 70 per cent. in 1995.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The framework within which hostels operate is given by the "National Standards for the Supervision of Offenders within the Community". A revised draft is currently subject to consultation. There are plans to issue a hostels handbook giving additional more detailed guidance for all hostel staff in the new year.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will remove the discretion of hostel managers to report minor breaches of hostel rules to the police and the courts in the final version of the national standards.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Draft revised national standards are currently the subject of consultation, and my right hon. and learned Friend will wish to consider any representations before deciding the wording of the final version.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the rules of procedure adopted for the Executive committee of the Dublin convention, relating to the state responsible for determining an asylum application.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The committee provided for in article 18 of the Dublin convention is required to determine its own rules of procedure. Draft rules are in preparation but they cannot be finally decided until the committee comes into existence on entry into force of the convention. I shall place a copy of the rules in the Library then.

Prison and Court Escort Service

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will announce the award of contracts for the prison and court escort services in (a) East Anglia, (b) Merseyside, (c) north Wales and (d) the north of England; and what is the proposed timetable for their implementation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the announcing of the award of contracts for the prison and court escort services in various areas.

Tenders for the court escort and custody service in East Anglia (Area 4), the North West and North Wales (Area 6), and the North of England (Area 8) were received on 19 September and are being considered. The Prisons Board should make its decision on contract award by the end of the year.

All three areas will be phased in. It is currently planned that Area 4 will commence contracted operation in July 1995 and will be fully operational by January 1996; Area 6 will start in August 1995 and be fully operational by February 1996; and Area 8 will commence in September 1995 and be fully operational by March 1996.

Bail

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be publishing the research into bail procedures which was submitted earlier in the year.

Mr. Maclean: The recommendations for best practice in the bail process arising from a report on research which was carried out last year are currently being studied. Once decisions have been taken on those recommendations we expect the report to be published.

Woolf Report

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made to date on each of the recommendations of the Woolf report; and what are the timetables for future implementation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

New Prisons

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable for the building and opening of the four new prisons which were announced in October 1993; and what progress has been made in identifying sites and securing planning permission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the timetable for building new prisons, and the progress that has been made on identifying sites for the new prisons to be built.

In September 1993, the Home Secretary announced that six new prisons are planned to be built, including the two announced in Autumn 1992. The first two of these will be in North East Liverpool and South Wales, and outline planning agreement for these has been obtained. It is anticipated that construction work will commence in 1995 and the prisons will open in 1997-98 providing about 1,400 places.

Potential sites for the remaining four prisons are still under investigation and it is too early to give a timetable for their building and opening.

A site has been identified for the third prison in the Salford area of Greater Manchester. Preliminary meetings have been held with the local planning authority as a prelude to seeking formal planning clearance. Several potential sites for the remaining three prisons have been identified and are under consideration.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision about the award of contracts for the proposed new prisons at Bridgend, Glamorgan, and Fazakerley, Merseyside; and what is the timetable for the building and opening of the prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the award of contracts for the proposed new prisons at Bridgend and Fazakerley.

Invitations to Tender for the provision of prisons at Bridgend and Fazakerley were sent out on 29 July 1994. Tenders are due back on 8 November and we are aiming to sign the contracts by the end of March 1995. We expect construction work to start soon after contract signature. The opening of each prison will depend on the proposals of the two preferred contractors, but we hope that prisoners will be able to be accepted early in the financial year 1997–98.

Fine Defaulters

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been received into prison for fine defaults in 1994 to the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many people have been received into prison for fine defaults in 1994 to the latest available date.

Provisional information for January to August 1994 shows that 13,619 persons (12,688 males and 931 females) were received into Prison Service establishments for fine default.

Prisons (Market Testing)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable for the proposed market-testing of prisons, to be chosen from the short-list of 21 prisons announced in August.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the timetable for the proposed market-testing of prisons.

The list was of twelve prisons. In addition, nine open prisons were asked for submissions to allow the Prisons Board to decide if any should be added to the shortlist. Having considered these submissions, the Board informed the local prisons on 30 September that no open prison would be shortlisted on this occasion.

The Prisons Board has not yet selected which one or two establishments will be market tested from the list of twelve.

I would expect the market test to take about nine months to reach the stage of selecting the successful bidder.

Prisoners

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prisoners are held in establishments where prisoners are unlocked for a total of at least 12 hours on weekdays.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what percentage of prisoners are held in establishments where prisoners are unlocked for a total of at least 12 hours on weekdays.

At the end of September 1994, 36·4 per cent. of the prison population were held in establishments where prisoners are unlocked for a total of at least twelve hours on weekdays.

Prisoner Statistics

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current estimate for the number of (a) sentenced prisoners and (b) unsentenced prisoners who are (i) mentally ill, (ii) drug misusers and (iii) alcohol addicted, in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of sentenced and unsentenced prisoners who are mentally ill, drug misusers, or alcohol addicted, in England and Wales.

This information is not available in the form requested. The most up to date information held centrally is for 27 June 1994. On that day there were 174 mentally disordered prisoners awaiting transfer to NHS psychiatric facilities, 684 being treated in prison health care centres and 1,921 requiring mental health care.

Information on drug misuse is taken from the study carried out by Professor Gunn et al from the Institute of Psychiatry and published in the report "Mentally Disordered Prisoners" in May 1991. This study of 1,751 sentenced male prisoners in England and Wales showed that before entering prison 43 per cent. had used cannabis, nine per cent. had used opiates, nine per cent. had used amphetamines and five per cent. had used cocaine. Within this group of prisoners eleven per cent. of adult male prisoners were classified as drug dependent, six per cent. of male young offenders and 23 per cent. of women prisoners were dependent. The Home Office were notified of 3,764 drug addicts identified within prison during 1993.

There are currently no central records of the number of alcohol addicted prisoners in England and Wales. There has been little research on alcohol misuse by prisoners but such studies as have been done suggest that alcohol misuse by prisoners before imprisonment is considerably higher than in the general population. However, the Mentally Disordered Prisoners study found a prevalence of alcohol abuse where treatment was indicated in 8·6 per cent. of adult sentenced prisoners, 8·7 per cent. of male sentenced young offenders and 4·4 per cent. of sentenced women.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales were made subject to hospital orders under sections 37 and 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983; and how many were transferred to hospital under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in the year 1993–94.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Reponsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners in England and Wales made subject to hospital orders under sections 37 and 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983, and the number transferred to hospital under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983, in the year 1993–94.

In the year 1993–94, 421 prisoners were made subject to hospital orders without restrictions (S37 Mental Health Act 1983) and 45 were made subject to hospital orders with restrictions (S37 and S41 Mental Health Act 1983).

Transfers of convicted prisoners to hospital under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 are recorded on a calendar year basis. 271 transfers took place during 1993.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (a) certified normal accommodation, (b) operational capacity and (c) actual population at each prison in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

[1] The population of Morton Hall and North Sea Camp appear to be in excess of the operational capacity. This is because the total population includes a number of prisoners temporarily absent from the establishment for home leave or other authorised reasons.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) unsentenced and (b) sentenced prisoners were being held at temporary allocation centres in prisons in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison

Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners being held at temporary allocation centres in prisons in England and Wales.

Because of the population pressures in the North West, it has been necessary to establish a temporary allocation centre at Risley prison.

On 18 October, the temporary allocation centre at Risley held 3 unsentenced prisoners and 182 sentenced prisoners.

Securicor Court Escort Service

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many escapes there have been from the Securicor court escort service in the metropolitan area: and how many prisoner movements have been carried out by the service at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of escapes and prisoner movements carried out in the Metropolitan area.

The contract with Securicor started on 27 June 1994. Up to 15 October there had been 15,469 prisoner movements and one escape.

Prison Dogs

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dog handlers and dogs are currently working in the prison dogs section; what tasks they undertake; and how many dogs are trained in the detection of (a) explosives and (b) illicit drugs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about dog handlers and dogs in the Prison Service.

There are 426 dog handlers and 463 dogs in the Prison Service. Patrol dogs undertake tasks such as patrol duties, escorting prisoners, searching for missing property (eg. escape equipment) searching for and detecting would-be escapers and apprehending them. They can also be used to safeguard the perimeter or for control in prison disturbances.

72 dogs are trained to detect arms and explosives (no dogs are trained to detect explosives only); 101 dogs are trained to detect illicit drugs.

Prisons (Overcrowding)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what preparations he is making to deal with prison overcrowding; and what plans there are to use (a) temporary buildings or portakabins, (b) Army camps, (c) prisons which are not currently in use and (d) prison ships or barges.

Mr Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the preparations being made to deal with prison overcrowding.

The provision of additional accommodation is already well underway. Work on the 2,000 new accommodation places at existing prisons is at an advanced stage and the new prison at Buckley Hall will be open before the end of this year. Tenders for the first two of the six new prisons announced last year are due in the next month.

The Prison Service has also developed contingency plans for an accelerated building programme to meet a potentially higher population but will decide whether or not to proceed with them in the light of population developments in the next few weeks.

There are no plans at present to use temporary buildings, portakabins, prisons ships or barges. Legislative changes however are being made in the Criminal Justice Bill which permit the use of ships/barges in the future. Contingency plans to defer closure of prisons and to convert army camps for use as low security prisons have been prepared to cope with any emergency need for additional accommodation.

Prisoners (Visits)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prisoners are held in establishments where they have the opportunity to exceed the minimum visiting entitlement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what percentage of prisoners are held in establishments where they have the opportunity to exceed the minimum visiting entitlement.

At the end of September 1994, all establishments were providing prisoners with the opportunity to exceed the minimum visiting entitlement.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department's definition is of burden sharing with regard to the admission and residence of refugees from third countries.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Burden sharing is not a precise term. In this context it is taken to mean a proportion sharing out of persons displaced by events, such as the conflict in the former Yugoslavia; it is also used more generally to describe the overall response of the international community to such events.

Custodial Sentences

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of (a) male juveniles and (b) juveniles convicted of an indictable offence received a custodial sentence in 1993–94, and in each of the last 10 years;

(2) what percentage of (a) men and (b) women convicted of an indictable offence received a custodial sentence in 1993–94, and in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1983 to 1993, which is provisional, is given in the table.

Information for 1994 will not be available until the autumn 1995.

[1] Immediate custody for persons aged 14 and under 21 comprises borstal training and unsuspended imprisonment (before 24 May 1983) or youth custody (from 24 May 1983) and detention centre orders until 1 October 1988 and detention in a young offender institution after 1 October 1988; for persons aged 21 and over immediate custody is equivalent to immediate imprisonment, which includes partly suspended sentences up to 30 September 1992.

[2] Improvements in the data collection methods used by the Metropolitan Police District have led to an increase in the number recorded as sentenced of about 2 per cent. in 1993 and 1 per cent. in 1992 for indictable offences and 0.5 per cent. in both years for summary non-motoring offences; also, about 5 per cent. for summary motoring offences in 1991.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking on illegal trading in radioactive materials, following his meeting in Berlin on 8 September with justice Ministers for central and eastern Europe.

Mr. Howard: My officials, together with colleagues in other Departments, are participating in work within the inter-governmental structures of the European Union to review the incidence of illegal trading in radioactive materials and to examine proposals for increased co-operation against it, in furtherance of the declaration of the ministerial conference in Berlin on 8 September. Responsibility for executive action in respect of any attempt illegally to import or export radioactive materials, or to engage in any other criminal activity involving such materials, remains with HM Customs and Excise and with the police respectively.

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now arrange to repeal the Prevention of Terrorism Acts.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans to do so at the present time.

Exclusion Orders

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange to revoke all exclusion orders which exclude citizens normally resident in Northern Ireland from entering the rest of the United Kingdom; how many such people are currently subject to such exclusion orders; how frequently such orders require renewal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced last Friday that I had that day revoked the orders excluding Mr. Gerry Adams and Mr. Martin McGuinness from Great Britain, that other exclusion orders would remain in place for the time being, and that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland would keep the need for them under review. It is the Government's hope that the day is approaching when exclusion orders will no longer be needed but we are not prepared to lower our guard prematurely.

There are currently 72 orders in force, of which 62 have been made by myself and my predecessors and 10 by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. All orders expire after three years unless revoked earlier. Of the 62 Home Office orders, 55 involve exclusion from Great Britain and seven exclusion from the United Kingdom.

Salford Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the timetable for the site purchase, planning, building and opening of the proposed new prison in Salford;

(2) whether the proposed new prison at Salford will be planned, built and run by private sector companies;

(3) how many prisoners will be held at the proposed new prison at Salford, announced on 18 October;

(4) whether the proposed new prison in Salford, announced on 18 October, will be one of the six new prisons announced by the Home Secretary in October 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 24 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the announcement on 18 October by the Prison Service of plans to build a new category B prison in Greater Manchester.

Discussions are taking place about the purchase of the site and about the planning implications, but a formal planning notice has not yet been submitted to the relevant planning authority, Salford City Council. Subject to the outcome of these discussions, it is envisaged that tenders could be invited for the prison's construction by the summer of 1995, which would enable the prison to open before the end of the financial year 1998–99.

Our initial assessment is that the site is large enough to accommodate up to 800 prisoners but the level of occupancy will be one of the issues for discussion with the planning authority.

This will be one of the six prisons announced by the Home Secretary on 2 September 1993, for which the design, construction, management and finance will be contracted out to the private sector.

DEFENCE

Pregnancy (Dismissals)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women have been dismissed from each of the armed forces on the grounds of pregnancy in each year since August 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Records held centrally show only the total numbers of women who left each of the services on grounds of pregnancy during the period since August 1990. These figures are as follows:

	Female officers[1]			Non-commissioned females
	RN	Army	RAF	RN	Army	RAF
August 1990—1 April 1991[2]	2	10	7	35	98	73
1991-92	4	17	15	78	177	140
1992-93	3	16	18	85	204	112
1993-94	—	6	9	85	184	91
1 April 1994—June 1994[3]	—	—	2	35[4]	29	12

Notes:

[1] Actual figures for the number of female officers who left on pregnancy between 1990-91 and 1992-93 are not available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost and effort. The figures provided are therefore estimates based on the percentage of non-commissioned females leaving on pregnancy.

[2] Figures represent pro-rata apportionment for 1990-91. Separate figures for period from August are not available.

[3] Latest figures available.

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the seabed search for depleted uranium shells fired into the Solway firth conducted on behalf of his Department during the summer; and what has been the cost to his Department to date.

Mr. Freeman: Following an underwater video survey by the Fisheries Protection Vessel, Solway Protector, British Telecom Marine, using Ministry of Defence equipment was contracted to attempt the recovery of sample depleted uranium penetrators from the bed of the Solway firth. Sonar, visual and magnetometer surveys were conducted with no result. Water and seabed silt samples showed no increase in background radiation levels. The cost of these activities was some £27,000 for work covering six days overall.

Equal Treatment Directive

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department conducted an evaluation of the impact of the equal treatment directive on any of their employment policies or practices when it came into force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any such evaluation having taken place within my Department. In any case, my Department believed at that time that the directive did not apply to the armed forces.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to obtain a copy of the report published in August by the Washington-based Natural Resources Defence Council on the control over military usable plutonium.

Mr. Soames: My Department already holds a copy of the report in question.

Al-Yamamah Agreement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent meetings he has had with Saudi Arabian Government officials on the plans of the Saudi Offset committee in regard to the Al-Yamamah agreement.

Mr. Freeman: My officials met the Saudi economic offset committee on 17 October to review the progress of the Al-Yamamah offset programme.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has requested from the Sunday Times the original tape recordings and other evidence reported on 9 October alleging the payment of brokerage fees to Mr. Mark Thatcher in regard to the Al-Yamamah defence contracts with Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Defence Export Sales Organisation has held any formal or informal meetings with Mr. Mark Thatcher in regard to the Al-Yamamah defence agreement with Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Freeman: I know of no evidence that Mr. Thatcher played any part in, or influenced, the British Government's negotiations with the Saudi Arabian Government on the Al-Yamamah contracts.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library copies of the Al-Yamamah defence agreements signed with Saudi Arabia on 26 September 1985, 17 February 1986 and 3 July 1988; and what plans there are to update these agreements.

Mr. Freeman: No. The understandings referred to are confidential between the British and Saudi Arabian Governments. There are no current plans to update these understandings.

Army Apprentices College

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department expects to spend in total on refurbishing the army apprentices college, Chepstow; and if he will publish a breakdown of that expenditure.

Mr. Soames: The estimated total cost of converting Beachley camp, Chepstow from an apprentices college to an infantry battalion barracks is £15,300,000. These costs are broken down as follows:

Conversion of barracks	9,300,000
Provision of additional quarters	5,000,000
Design and management	1,000,000

All of these figures are inclusive of VAT.

Air Chief Marshal (Residence)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will describe the procedures leading to the appointment of KPMG Marwick to carry out an investigation into expenditure on the Air Chief Marshal's official residence.

Mr. Soames: Wherever possible and appropriate my Department places consultancy work by competitive tender. On this occasion, however, the need to make rapid progress with the investigation made it preferable to engage Ms Masters of KPMG Marwick. Ms Masters was already engaged on other work for the Department and we were confident that she was a suitable choice to conduct the assignment.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the guidance given regarding avoidance procedures to pilots operating in low flying or ultra-low-flying regimes when training over geographically prominent secondary schools.

Mr. Soames: No specific guidance on avoidance procedures is given to pilots when training in the vicinity of schools. However, pilots are instructed to avoid flying over major conurbations and towns and to avoid all other populated areas wherever possible, whether they are listed for avoidance or not. In tactical training areas, pilots are instructed, if possible, to avoid all buildings likely to be occupied by people when conducting operational low flying.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if pilots are permitted to use geographically prominent secondary schools as low flying targets during low-level training flights.

Mr. Soames: Schools do not feature on lists from which targets for simulated toss and dive attacks must be selected. Aircrews are instructed that targets for simulated level attacks are to be selected with consideration for nearby habitation, thereby ruling out the choice of schools.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of low-flying sorties which have passed within a five-mile radius of Berwickshire high school in Duns during the last 12 months.

Mr. Soames: The information is not held in the form requested.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria would have to be satisfied in order to secure a permanent low flying exclusion zone around a secondary school in a geographically prominent position in a low flying practice zone.

Mr. Soames: Many schools are located in areas such as large towns where low flying is not practised. It is our policy not to grant avoidances for schools in other areas where routine low flying takes place. To do otherwise would concentrate the activity on neighbouring communities and would have an unacceptable impact on our ability to meet essential training needs.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence is he will make an official visit to Berwickshire high school in Duns in order to explain Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding low overflights of secondary schools in prominent positions in low flying practice zones.

Mr. Soames: There is no specific policy regarding low flying overflights of secondary schools in prominent positions in low flying practice zones. Our policy on low flying was explained to staff and parents at Berwickshire High School by the RAF regional community relations officer for the Borders when he visited the school on 11 May, and my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence responded in his letter of 22 July to further concerns raised by the clerk of the school.

Military Land Byelaws

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to reply to letters sent to him on 28 August, 5 September and 19 September by Lindis Percy, of Bradford, a constituent of the hon. Member for Bradford, West, concerning military land byelaws and related matters.

Mr. Soames: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's office replied on the 21st October to the letter of 28 August from Ms Lindis Percy. As to her letters of 5 and 19 September, replies will be sent shortly.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people in each of the last 10 years to date have been (a) arrested, (b) charged, (c) convicted and (d) acquitted of offences relating to military land bylaws.

Mr. Soames: Before 1988 information of this sort was not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. From 1988 the figures, which relate to the number of reported incidents in England and Wales, are as follows:

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Arrested	245	641	619	151	30	21	3
Charged	175	108	88	11	6	5	—
Convicted	87	35	49	5	4	3	—
Acquitted	11	—	16	—	—	—	—

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to review military land byelaws at HMS Forest Moor, at Menwith Hill and at RAF Alconbury; when the review is due to be completed; when he expects to receive the conclusions of the review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department is currently reviewing all military land byelaws. This will include those at HMS Forest Moor, Menwith Hill and RAF Alconbury. Because this is an extensive and legally complex task, I am unable to say when the review will be completed.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost to his Department, in each year since 1984, to date, of legal costs relating to military land byelaws; and in how many court proceedings in each of these years relating to military land byelaws the Ministry has been legally represented.

Mr. Soames: It is not possible separately to identify the legal costs relating to military land byelaws from other work carried out by my Department's legal adviser and his staff.

I will write to the hon. Member concerning the number of court proceedings relating to military land byelaws in which the Ministry has been legally represented.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military land byelaws he regards as being invalid; to which sites such byelaws relate; and what steps he has taken to take down byelaw notices displayed at these sites.

Mr. Soames: Court judgments have indicated that there are defects in the military lands byelaws at HMS Forest Moor, Menwith Hill, RAF Alconbury and Greenham Common. Byelaw notices are no longer displayed at these establishments.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to reply to a letter dated 20 August from Lindis Percy of Bradford.

Mr. Soames: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's office replied to the letter of Ms Lindis Percy on 21 October.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of military land byelaws at RAF Molesworth, Lakenheath, Fylingdales, Brawdy, Burghfield and Aldermaston.

Mr. Soames: The military byelaws at those sites remain extant.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will issue instructions for all military land byelaw notices, concerning byelaws deemed by the courts as being unsafe, to be taken down from public display; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Military land byelaw notices are no longer displayed at those sites where the courts have declared that the byelaws are defective. When new byelaws are promulgated, appropriate notices will be erected.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which military lands byelaws are currently regarded by him as being operational and in force; in how many such cases such byelaws are being used and observed; and how many have been deemed by the courts to be defective on their face.

Mr. Soames: Military land byelaws operate at any site to which they apply unless they have been declared defective by the courts. Byelaws for HMS Forest Moor, Menwith Hill, RAF Alconbury and Greenham Common have been so declared.

RAF Chicksands

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when RAF Chicksands is due to close; and when activities conducted there will be transferred to the National Security Agency of America base at Edzell.

Mr. Soames: The US Air Force will leave RAF Chicksands by the end of September 1995. RAF Chicksands is a US Department of Defense communications centre managed by the United States Air Force. It is not our policy to comment further on operational matters.

Flight Costs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the comparative cost of Tornado and Harrier flights of similar duration in the United Kingdom and Germany.

Mr. Soames: The average current cost of a flight lasting one hour by Tornado and Harrier aircraft based in Germany and the United Kingdom is:

Tornado GR1	(a) Germany	6,617	(b) United Kingdom	6,642
Harrier GR5	(b) Germany	3,720	(b) United Kingdom	3,715

These figures exclude apportionment of stationed fixed costs.

Aircraft Accidents

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's policy on the replacement of aircraft lost through accidents.

Mr. Soames: Operational aircraft fleets generally include a reserve for peacetime attrition from which aircraft can be taken to replace those lost through accidents.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tornado aircraft have crashed or crash landed in the past three years; what where the causes of these accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Since October 1991, seven RAF Tornados have crashed or crash landed. Six accidents are still under investigation by RAF boards of inquiry; summaries of the findings of the respective boards will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as they become available. The remaining accident occurred on 21 October 1993 as a result of the ignition of a fuel leak. A summary of the findings of the board of inquiry into this accident has already been placed in the Library of the House.

HIV

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel in the armed forces have contracted HIV; and if he will make a statement on policy towards those with the virus.

Mr. Soames: Twenty-eight service personnel are known to have contracted HIV. Personnel who consider themselves to be at risk of HIV infection are encouraged to undergo counselling and voluntary testing. Service personnel who are infected are given counselling and receive advice and treatment appropriate to their medical condition. The services continue to employ HIV carriers until their health deteriorates to a point at which it is appropriate to terminate their employment on medical grounds.

Royal Marines Reserve

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a decision has been made on the future of the Royal Marines Reserve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: No decisions on the future size and shape of the Royal Marines Reserve have yet been taken. Should any proposals be made, they will be subject to formal consultation.

Benefit Claimants

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many families in the armed services claim income support or housing benefit.

Mr. Soames: The claiming of benefits is a private matter between the individual and the appropriate authority; if members of the armed forces were for any reason entitled to receive such a benefit, it would be claimed through the Benefits Agency or the local council, as appropriate.

European Security Policy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the creation of a common European security policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The treaty on European Union provides for a common foreign and security policy that will include the eventual framing of a common European defence policy; and that this and other matters having defence implications are dealt with by the Western European Union. At its meeting in Luxembourg on 9 May this year, the WEU Council of Ministers tasked the Permanent Council to begin work on the formulation of a common European defence policy, with the aim of presenting preliminary conclusions to the Council of Ministers' next meeting in November. To that end, work is in hand in the Permanent Council on an approach to formulating such a policy.

Service Hospitals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of service personnel has been treated at the service hospitals of Haslar and Wroughton in each of the last five years; and what is the estimated travelling time to each hospital from the closest airfield likely to be used in emergencies.

Mr. Soames: The proportion of service personnel, expressed as a percentage of the total strength of the armed forces, treated at the Royal Naval hospital Haslar and the Princess Alexandra RAF hospital Wroughton averaged 7·3 per cent. and 6·4 per cent. respectively in the five years from 1989–90 to 1993–94. The closest airfield to the Princess Alexandra RAF hospital is RAF Lyneham, which is approximately 30 minutes by road. The closest suitable airfield to the Royal Naval hospital Haslar is Eastleigh, which is about 45 minutes away by road. Both hospitals have helicopter landing sites. Depending on the circumstances, Service patients requiring emergency treatment will continue to be taken to the most convenient civilian or military hospital; one of the primary purposes for a military hospital is to train defence medical services personnel.

Frigate Sales

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last refit took place for each frigate that was sold to Pakistan; and how much each of these refits cost.

Mr. Freeman: Refit details for five frigates that were sold to Pakistan between 1940 and 1951 are no longer held. Additionally, the cost of refits undertaken before the dockyards passed into commercial management in April 1987 is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Details of the refit dates of frigates sold to Pakistan since 1951 and the approximate costs, where available, are as follows.

Ship	Date last refit completed	Total cost
HMS Diomede	August 1984	Not available
HMS Amazon	September 1984	Not available
HMS Apollo	May 1985	Not available
HMS Ambuscade	December 1985	Not available
HMS Active	August 1986	Not available
HMS Avenger	April 1988	£17 million
HMS Alacrity	November 1987	£20 million
HMS Arrow	July 1989	£23 million

Gulf War Syndrome

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what study of the effects of fluorine have been made in the context of Gulf war syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Fluorine was neither identified nor encountered as a specific hazard to service personnel of the alliance forces during the Gulf conflict. No evidence of any of the effects of fluorine has since been found in any of the medical investigations conducted on United Kingdom Gulf war veterans.

Overseas Deployment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the Armilla patrol costs Britain per year before UN reimbursement; and how much the deployment of aircraft to patrol the no-fly zones in Iraq is costing per year.

Mr. Soames: It is not possible to separate the costs of individual fleet tasks, such as the Armilla patrol from the costs of operating the fleet as a whole. The additional costs to the defence budget arising from the no-fly zones in the Gulf region are estimated to be:

1992–93	8,900,000
1993–94	16,100,000
1994–95	9,400,000

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what aircraft were used to deploy British forces to Rwanda and Zaire.

Mr. Soames: The British contingent in the United Nations assistance mission for Rwanda were deployed using a combination of British and American aircraft. The first elements travelled in Royal Air Force Hercules aircraft. The remainder deployed in US Air Force C5s and C141s operating on behalf of the United Nations.

English Language Training

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people will attend the English language training course in the United Kingdom; and what will be the estimated cost per attendee and for the course as a whole.

Mr. Soames: We currently offer a number of English language training courses to students of various nationalities. With the exception of core courses, the number of courses and type of training offered depends on the requirements of overseas services.

Course costs depend on duration, syllabus and number of students. The average cost per student per week is currently £470.

Each course is allocated a maximum student capacity between six and 16, although where specific training is requested, this may vary.

Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Ministry's estimate of the Bosnian army's weaponry, and its estimates on the type and quantity of illegal arms that have reached the Bosnian army since 1992.

Mr. Soames: The Bosnian army is assessed to have about 20 tanks, 300 artillery pieces and mortars, and five helicopters. We believe that the arms embargo has prevented deliveries of heavy weaponry to the Bosnian Government, but that supplies of small arms, light anti-tank weapons and ammunition have reached them, from a number of sources.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Harrier shot down over Bosnia will be replaced.

Mr. Soames: A replacement Sea Harrier joined HMS Ark Royal within a day of the loss of the Sea Harrier over Gorazde on 16 April. There are no plans to buy a new aircraft specifically to replace the one lost, as the purchase of attrition aircraft was designed with such eventualities in mind.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many violations of the Bosnian no-fly zone have taken place this year.

Mr. Soames: As at 30 September there had been 985 reported violations of the Bosnian no-fly zone; 98 per cent. of these were attributed to helicopters.

Trident

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the possibility of using Trident in a sub-strategic role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced to the House on 18 October 1993, Official Report, column 34, that we plan that Trident will provide the United Kingdom's sub-strategic nuclear capability in the longer term.

Test Ban Negotiations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the comprehensive test ban negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Good progress has been made in the negotiations towards a comprehensive test ban treaty, which have been the main focus of the work in the conference on disarmament this year. A rolling text has been produced which covers all the main issues in treaty form, and is based on the work of the two working groups on verification and legal and institutional issues. The United Kingdom has been playing an active and constructive part in the negotiations and the contribution of the United Kingdom friend of the chair verification has been particularly recognised and appreciated.

Equipment Co-operation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on how the United Kingdom has encouraged equipment co-operation between east European countries and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence has been involved in a number of initiatives designed to provide central and eastern European countries with an understanding of United Kingdom defence procurement policy and practices. These initiatives have comprised the exchange of expert working groups from the defence procurement agencies of the United Kingdom and central and eastern European countries and the United Kingdom's involvement in visits to those countries of teams of experts from NATO.

We have also provided United Kingdom defence industry with information on our approach to equipment procurement from central and eastern Europe to help them make commercial judgments on the possibility of joint ventures with central and eastern European industry.

Armed Forces in Europe Agreement

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what equipment has been sold or leased abroad as a result of reductions under the conventional armed forces in Europe agreement.

Mr. Freeman: No United Kingdom equipment has been sold or leased abroad as a result of reductions under the conventional armed forces in Europe treaty.

Nuclear Weapons (Ukraine)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the form of assistance that Britain is providing to Ukraine in its dismantling of nuclear weapons; which British engineers are helping; what progress has been made in the dismantling; and for how long this commitment lasts.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom does not currently provide Ukraine with specific assistance for the dismantling of the nuclear weapons remaining in her territory. Assistance with the safe disposal of hazardous rocket fuels was offered, but declined. However, a number of more general assistance programmes, including ones run under the auspices of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, should help with the drawdown of the former strategic rocket forces in Ukraine, particularly the resettlement and retraining of personnel.

East European Employees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been agreed for a training course for east European civilians employed in the defence field.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has written to colleagues in central Europe, inviting attendance at a seminar on the roles and responsibilities of civilians in the defence field, to be held in the United Kingdom in November. We shall determine our future programme of assistance, including training, in the light of requirements identified at the seminar.

Partnership for Peace

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence with what countries Britain has begun military co-operation under the partnership for peace; with which countries exercises have been held in 1994; what was the experience gained from these exercises; and what co-operation has already been agreed for the rest of this year and 1995.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has undertaken bilateral military co-operation with the majority of signatories to partnership for peace. This bilateral activity is being subsumed into PFP as the partnership work programme is developed.

During 1994, United Kingdom land forces have conducted bilateral peacekeeping exercises with Poland and Hungary, and United Kingdom naval forces participated in a Norwegian—led exercise in the Barents sea. In addition, the United Kingdom has participated in three PFP exercises:

Co-operative Bridge in Poland, involving 13 nations;

Co-operative Spirit in Holland involving 12 nations; and Co-operative Venture in the Norwegian sea, involving 14 nations.

We are continuing to evaluate the military lessons of these exercises but they will provide useful lessons on the planning and conduct of future exercises in the evolving PFP programme. The 1995 programmes of PFP and bilateral work have yet to be finalised.

Redundancies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been paid out in redundancy payments to officers of brigadier rank and above in each of the past five years.

Mr. Soames: In the past five financial years, the following payments have been made to brigadiers or their equivalents in other services:

Year	£
1989–90	26,908
1990–91	[illegible]185
1991–92	86,[illegible]0
1992–93	257,352
1993–94	866,836

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers of brigadier rank and above have chosen redundancy in each of the past five years.

Mr. Soames: In the past five financial years, the following numbers of officers of brigadier rank and above and their equivalents in other services, have chosen redundancy:

Year	Number
1989–90	—
1990–91	—
1991–92	—
1992–93	12
1993–94	34

Hercules Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Hercules, of which types, were advertised for sale in September;

(2) if he will make a statement on the state of the Hercules aircraft being offered for sale.

Mr. Freeman: No RAF Hercules aircraft has been offered for sale. An advertisement was placed by my Department in September to assess the potential market for RAF Hercules, should they become available for sale.

Rowallan Company

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applicants for officer training have been referred to (a) Rowallan Company and (b) another extra training scheme, in each of the past 10 years; and what proportion in each year has been accepted at Sandhurst after this extra training.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Helicopter Training Centres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of running each of the three rotary wing helicopter training centres; and how many personnel are employed at each centre.

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

RPS Coulston

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was paid to RPS Coulston for its study proposals on the Otterburn training area.

Mr. Soames: To date, approximately £172,000, excluding value added tax, has been paid under two separate contracts to RPS Coulston for its study proposals on the Otterburn training area.

Officer Training

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications for officer training there have been in each of the last 10 years; and how many were rejected by the Royal Commissions Board in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames: The number of applications to the armed forces for officer training and the number rejected in the last 10 years, either by selection boards or beforehand, are as follows:

Year	Royal Navy		Army		Royal Air Force
	Applied	Rejected	Applied	Rejected	Applied	Rejected

(to 30 September 1994)

Notes:

1. Officer applicants to the Royal Navy are interviewed by the Admiralty Interview Board, to the Army by the Regular Commissions Board, and to the Royal Air Force by the Officer and Aircrew Selection Centre.
2. Number for the Royal Navy for Financial Year 1985–86 to 1987–88 are not readily available and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.
3. Royal Naval and Royal Air Force figures include those for serving personnel seeking commissions.
4. Army figures do not include those for doctors, dentists, nurses, veterinary surgeons and lawyers as their applications are dealt with by the appropriate Corps/Service.

Helicopter Pilots

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rotary wing helicopter pilots have been trained at each of the three training centres in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

Cruise Missiles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the proposal to buy cruise missiles from the USA; what the estimated costs will be; and when they could become operational.

Mr. Freeman: Initial feasibility studies into the UK's acquisition of Tomahawk land attack missiles have just begun. The results of these studies will be available next year and will provide us with the means of assessing the contribution that TLAM could make to the UK's defence capability and what the cost and operational implications would be.

Tornado Jets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if liability over the damage done to the Tornado F-3s at RAF St. Athans by Airwork has been decided; how much the repairs will cost; and when the last Tornado will again be in service.

Mr. Freeman: My Department intends to claim against the Bricom Group, the former owners of Airwork Ltd, for the cost of repairing the damage done to the Tornado F3 aircraft and for other consequential costs. In view of the pending claim, it would be inappropriate to comment on the cost of repair. A schedule for recovering the aircraft has been identified which will ensure that the RAF's operational capability is not affected.

Otterburn Training Area

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was paid to RPS Coulston for its study proposals on the Otterburn training area.

Mr. Soams: To date approximately £172,000 excluding value added tax, has been paid under two separate contracts to RPS Coulston for its study proposals on the Otterburn training area.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Newton: No public opinion surveys have been commissioned by my Department during the period specified. I am not responsible for any agencies.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee how much money was spent with foreign companies on refurbishment within the Palace of Westminster in the current financial year; and how much was spent in the same period with British firms.

Mr. Ray Powell: No contracts have been let to foreign firms by the Parliamentary Works Directorate in the current financial year for refurbishment work. However, contractors have normal commercial freedom to subcontract and purchase supplies, provided that they comply with specifications set by the Director of Works or other relevant authorities of the Palace of Westminster. Within these constraints contractors may choose occasionally to use foreign suppliers where they are competitive in quality or service. Some £10 million is forecast to be spent in the current financial year on maintaining the Palace of Westminster.

Alcohol and Tobacco

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present estimated value of revenue lost to the Exchequer because of illicit cross-border trade in alcohol and tobacco products.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Forecasting levels of illicit activity is by its nature always difficult. A broad estimate derived from amounts seized has been made of £35 million on revenue loss from all smuggling of excise goods. Work is continuing to improve estimation in this field.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average monthly revenue value of seizures made by HM Customs and Excise during 1993–94 for (a) all tobacco goods, (b) all alcohol beverages, (c) hand-rolled tobacco and (d) beer; and what is the estimated monthly revenue value of seizures for the same products for the six months to September 1994.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The average monthly revenue value of seizures made by HM Customs and Excise in the financial year ending 31 March 1994 were (a) £98,514 for all tobacco products, (b) £64,892 for all alcoholic beverages, (c) £77,205 for hand-rolled tobacco and (d) £41,091 for beer.

Details of seizures for the month of September 1994 are not currently available. The average monthly revenue value of seizure for the same products for the five months to August 1994 were (a) £287,467, (b) £93,060, (c) £243,949 and (d) £60,280 respectively.

Pay and Grading

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, how many negotiators are now employed in Departments and agencies following the Government's decision to delegate pay and grading; what was the equivalent number of officials employed at the treasury when pay was settled nationally; and what has been the cost of training these additional officials and the overall additional cost of pay negotiations in the revised form.

Mr. Aitken: In 1993–94, there were 242 staff in the Treasury directorate which looks after civil service management and pay. It is for those who have received pay and grading delegation to decide how to conduct their negotiations and the size and composition of their negotiating teams, and to ensure that their delegated arrangements represent value for money.

Personal Pension Sales

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress the Securities and Investments Board has made with its inquiries into sales of personal pensions.

Mr. Nelson: The Securities and Investments Board, the chief investment regulator, has today issued a statement determining how compensation is to be delivered for people who have personal pensions instead of being in an occupational pension scheme and who now face financial loss as a result of bad investment advice. I have today placed copies of the statement in the Libraries of both Houses.

Today's statement follows the initiative announced by SIB last December, when it published evidence that many sales of personal pensions appeared not to have been made in full compliance with the regulation under the Financial Services Act. Since then, with the help of experts for the life and pensions industry, the SIB has mounted an exercise to assess the problem and to prevent it recurring.

The Government are also taking action to make sure that the arrangements for redress are brought into effect as efficiently as possible. The public service pension schemes are setting other occupational schemes a good example. There is also clarification of the tax treatment of compensation payments.

It is now clear that some sales of personal pensions in the past took place on the basis of bad advice, not given in accordance with the regulatory rules then in force. SIB's statement today implements the assurance I gave in the House to the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham and my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. T. Smith) on 8 December 1993, Official Report column 233-34. Anyone with a personal pension who is found to face financial damage as a result of mis-selling will be entitled to redress. The aim will be to provide this compensation by putting people in a financial position equivalent to that in which they would have been had the mis-selling not taken place.

There is at present no way of knowing the eventual total cost but there will inevitably be a substantial call on the financial services industry. Investors can be reassured that the industry as a whole can and will pay. In cases where the firm responsible has ceased trading, this will entail calling on the industry's compensation schemes.

The SIB statement sets out in detail how firms responsible for sales of personal pensions should review their cases; how they can identify mis-selling and damage to investors caused by it; and, where mis-selling leading to financial damage has occurred, how appropriate redress should be provided. The details of the review process and the formula for redress have been drawn up with the assistance of experts in the life and pensions industry and in the legal and actuarial professions. The regulators will now ensure that firms responsible for past pensions business take the necessary steps to review their casebooks. The Personal Investment Authority is setting up a pensions unit to examine cases sold by firms which are no longer in business.

The review process will be supervised by the regulators. Many people will be contacted by the firm which sold their pension, or the pensions unit, and asked for information to help decide whether further investigation is required. SIB is distributing widely an explanatory leaflet, the Investor's Guide. It will also be generally available from libraries and citizens advice bureaux.

It will take at least two years to carry out the reviews in an appropriately thorough and systematic way as the interests of both personal pension holders and other policyholders require. The cases to be reviewed first will be those where financial damage caused by mis-selling is judged most likely to have occurred and where the effect of mis-selling could have the most immediate impact. These priority groups include the cases of investors who have died or retired. In addition, any personal pension investor who seeks it will have his or her case reviewed.

These reviews will no doubt show that many people who transferred to or opted for a personal pension were given good advice. Where redress is required, its form will depend on the circumstances of the investor. In many cases, and where it is possible, it will be desirable to reinstate people in their occupational schemes. If this cannot be done, the personal pension will usually be topped up. Sometimes additional benefits may need to be provided, for example through insurance policies. Those already retired may get top-up annuities.

With these forms of redress in mind, I very much hope that occupational schemes in the private sector will follow the example of public service schemes such as those for the teachers and nurses. These schemes are allowing current employees not only to rejoin for future service but also to buy back pension rights for previous service at reasonable cost.

All these remedies are designed to put the investor in a financial position equivalent to what would have been the case if the mis-selling had not occurred. The Chancellor intends to introduce legislation in due course to ensure that an investor in that position will have the same tax bill as would have been the case had there been no payment of compensation for mis-selling of the personal pension or buyout contract.

The action announced by SIB today relates to people who bought personal pensions in preference to an occupational scheme.

There are many others who would otherwise have been contributing to the state earnings related pension scheme. The SIB is also investigating, with the help of DSS, whether there has been mis-selling to people in this position. SIB intends to publish its findings in this further review next year. If a problem is revealed, SIB will prescribe appropriate redress.

Personal pensions remain a flexible and entirely suitable way of saving to provide a secure income in retirement for a great many people. They can make it possible to combine a mobile and varied career with a good pension. These advantages will no doubt ensure that personal pensions continue to appeal to many people. I also have no doubt that they will have a significant role to play in future pension provision.

But for people to choose personal pensions with confidence, they must be able to rely on high standards of professionalism from those responsible for selling them. They must be able to trust advisers and sales staff to recommend suitable products. That is why in March the SIB defined new tougher standards for future sales of personal pensions.

As a result, investors choosing between occupational and personal pensions now get a "reason why" letter to explain each personal pension sale, backed by sophisticated analysis of their own personal circumstances. The regulators are following this up with more intensive supervision of sales. The Department of Social Security has also issued guidance to employers about the advice they may give to any of their employees considering a personal pension. These new standards are backed up by more demanding training and competence requirements. Financial services firms are already implementing the new standards. So people making decisions about whether to buy a personal pension instead of belonging to an occupational scheme can have confidence in the quality of the advice they get.

The problems addressed in SIB's statement today demonstrate how important it is that authorised firms operating in the financial services sector take these responsibilities to their customers seriously. Investors must be able to reply on their investment advisers to comply with the regulatory standards.

There can be no doubt that SIB's action to compensate investors is a success for the regulatory system. SIB has acted with commendable thoroughness and independence. I have no hesitation in concluding that the system of regulation, in which SIB takes the prime role, and which benefits from major practitioner input, is sound and working effectively to protect investors. The reforms instituted by the SIB review last year are beginning to bear fruit.

The financial services industry plays an important and growing role in a sophisticated modern economy such as ours. Increasing affluence means that people will more often have resources available for investment. They must be able to invest with confidence. A clean, well regulated market is in the interest of consumers and financial services firms alike.

Ecofin

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union held on 21 October.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: EC Finance Ministers met in Brussels on Friday 21 October to discuss the own resources decision and Italian and Spanish milk disallowances.

Italy, and to a lesser extent Spain and Greece, faced disallowance due to their failure to fine farmers who had exceeded EC milk quotas over the period 1989–93. Italy and Spain claimed that this was unfair, as their national quotas had been set too low to begin with. In 1992, it was agreed at a Council of Agriculture Ministers to increase Italian and Spanish milk quotas for 1993–94. Subsequently, in the course of clearing the EAGGF accounts for 1989 and 1990, the Commission decided to disallow only the amounts which would have been payable by Italy and Spain if they had had in those years the extra milk quota which had been awarded them for 1993–94. It indicated that it intended to do the same for 1991, 1992 and 1993. This would have resulted in Italy and Spain paying roughly half the amount for which they were liable at the outset.

The United Kingdom objected to this and brought proceedings before the European Court of Justice on the grounds that the Commission had exceeded its competence by backdating quota, a power which could be exercised only by the Council of Ministers. Italy and Spain also began ECJ proceedings on the grounds that the disallowance decisions were still excessively harsh and claimed that they should make no further repayments at all.

Even had we ultimately won on all aspects of our ECJ cases, on which judgment was still two years distant, the level of the fine would have been a matter for the Council to determine on the basis of a proposal from the Commission. There is no reason to believe that the Commission would then have produced any different proposal from the one that it had originally made. Therefore Italy and Spain would only have paid roughly half of the penalties for which they were theoretically liable even if we had won our cases in the ECJ on all points.

I therefore negotiated a settlement which resulted in Italy and Spain agreeing to repay much higher sums to the Community budget than they would have paid if we have not brought our action in the European Court or if we had allowed our action before the Court to take its course to a possibly successful conclusion over the next two years.

Ecofin on Friday agreed to increase total disallowance from the Commission proposal of 2·1 billion ECU or 1·6 billion to 3.2 billion ECU or £2·5 billion—an increase of 1·1 billion ECU or £860 million on the level of disallowance fixed by the Commission. This is the largest agricultural fine even levied in the history of the European Community. Payment will start in 1995.

North Sea Oil Revenue

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total income to the Exchequer from North sea oil revenue (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1979.

Sir George Young: Government revenues raised from North sea oil and gas production between 1974–75 and 1978–79 were £930 million. Since 1979–80 they have been £75,000 million.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London and (b) at each other location.

Mr. Howard: The Home Office has 14 press officers in post, including the director and deputy director of information who deal with all media. There are two vacancies. All are based in London. There are a number of agencies accountable to the Department which employ Government information service press officers who are not included in these figures.

Policing (Humberside)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future policing arrangements for Humberside.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced today that the county of Humberside would be replaced by four unitary authorities, with the area around Goole, in the present district of Boothferry, transferring to North Yorkshire.

In the light of this announcement I shall need to consider whether to retain a separate Humberside police force, based on the four unitary authorities. Goole will be policed by the North Yorkshire force from the date of the local government reorganisation, in accordance with the provisions of section 39 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994.

My preference is to retain a separate Humberside force but before reaching a final decision I shall wish to consult the forces, police authorities and local authorities which would be affected by the decision. I shall also ask Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary to report on the viability of a police force based on the boundaries of the four unitary authorities.

The consultation will begin immediately and I shall announce my final decision as soon as possible.

Police Core and Ancillary Tasks

Sir Ian Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the interim report of the review of police core and ancillary tasks.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed a copy of the interim report in the Libraries of both Houses.

Passports

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of British passports reported as lost or stolen in 1992; how many were in foreign countries; and what were the figures for each of the preceding five years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Precise figures for the number of United Kingdom passports lost or stolen are not kept but it is estimated that about 70,000 are reported each year, of which about 20,000 are in foreign countries. A significant number of these passports are expired while a smaller percentage will subsequently be found having been originally misplaced.

Passport issuing within the United Kingdom is now computerised and the system allows the recording of machine-readable passports that have been reported lost or stolen. Arrangements are being considered which would provide the United Kingdom Passport Agency with statistics from the computerised records to monitor the problem.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which countries, other than the United Kingdom, the largest number of British passports were recorded as lost or stolen in 1992–93.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Figures provided by British Consulates indicate that Australia with 1,161, the United States with 1,055 and France with 1,025 recorded the highest number of United Kingdom passports reported to them as lost or stolen during 1993.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people lost or had more than one passport stolen in 1992–93 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No separate record is kept of the number of persons who have reported more than one passport lost or stolen during a given period.

Litter

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in England and Wales were prosecuted for dropping litter in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1989 to 1993, which is provisional, is given in the table:

*Number of defendants prosecuted for dropping litter[1] 1989–1993

England and Wales	1989	1990	1991	1992	*1993

Wheelclamping

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what analysis his Department has made of the implications for policing on wheelclamping of the outcome of Total Car Park Management v. Dr. Colin Spink in the Oxford county court on 13 July.

Mr. Maclean: The judgment referred to related to a civil dispute and has no direct implications for the police. We are, of course, taking all relevant judgments into account while formulating policy on wheelclamping on private land.

Closed-circuit Television

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the research being undertaken by or on behalf of his Department into the use of closed-circuit television, including the subject matter of such research; who is undertaking the work; and when a report on each study is due to be provided to his Department.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office police research group is currently carrying out a study of closed-circuit television systems in town centres with the aim of identifying the characteristics of schemes which make an effective contribution to the control of crime and operational policing generally. A report will be available by Easter 1995.

The Home Office police scientific development branch is carrying out a study of the technical and operational aspects of CCTV systems aimed at setting appropriate performance standards for CCTV systems and assisting crime prevention officers. The final report will be available in July 1995.

PSDB has also commissioned a study of a number of town centre control rooms looking at the human factors associated with the monitoring of CCTV images. This is being carried out by CCD Design and Ergonomics Ltd and a report is expected before the end of the year.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the burglaries recorded in each borough by the Metropolitan police in the year ended June were in a dwelling; and how many were in another building;

(2) how many incidents of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle and of theft from a motor vehicle were recorded by the Metropolitan police in each borough in the year ended June.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is responsible for appointments to board of visitors to prisons in the West Midlands region and in Shropshire. Appointments to boards of visitors are for a maximum of three years and are renewable. Members do not receive a salary but are entitled to travelling, subsistence and financial loss allowances.

Rape

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for the last year for which information is available for each Crown court circuit, what has been the average length of sentence for those found guilty of rape after (a) pleading guilty and (b) pleading not guilty, and, for those pleading not guilty but found guilty, what has been the percentage sentenced to more than five years imprisonment.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 21 October 1994]: Plea data is not collected centrally.

The table gives information for 1993, which is provisional, on the number of males aged 21 and over found guilty and sentenced at the Crown court for rape offences, by circuit.

The 1993 information given is expected to be final but has been labelled provisional until publication of the Command Paper "Criminal statistics" on 2 November.

The reply is on the same basis, as information for previous years from Crown court circuits and individual court centres previously provided to the House of Commons Library. A comparison is given in the table. The variation between years for the smaller circuits such as Wales and Chester and Western reflects the small number of persons sentenced per year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

For over 6 months up to and including 12 months	1,250
For over 12 months up to and including 18 months	240
For over 18 months	200

[1] Not all of these defendants will have been in continuous prison custody since their first remand. This period excludes any time spent in non-Prison Service-Establishments (eg police cells) before reception on remand into a Prison Service establishment; it includes inmates who are waiting trial and those being tried.

Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell) of 18 October, Official Report, column 138, to what (a) Government Department and (b) other authorities any evidence on impropriety in the Al Yamamah arms deal should be forwarded.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister who are the appropriate authorities (a) for the receipt and (b) the investigation of complaints made in the case of Mr. Mark Thatcher relating to British defence contracts.

The Prime Minister: Matters within the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government in relation to defence contracts should be addressed, in the first instance, to the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister to which authority the complaint from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) to the Prime Minister's Office concerning the role of Mr. Mark Thatcher in relation to defence contracts was referred; and what action was taken.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 October 1994]: The complaint was referred to the Cabinet Office, which in turn consulted the Ministry of Defence, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Treasury, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the security service.

The conclusion reached was that the document that the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) had sent contained a number of clear errors, which cast doubt on its reliability. No evidence was found to support the allegations made.

Tigris and Euphrates Valleys

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the United States Government, the United Nations, other EC countries and the Arab League about the shortage of medicine, water pumps and water filters in the valleys of the Tigris and the Euphrates; and which statistics are available to Her Majesty's Government on the incidence of marasmus, kwashiorkor, and other water-related diseases in the Baghdad area over the summer.

The Prime Minister: Except for the Arab League, we meet representatives of these countries and organisations at routine meetings of the United Nations department of humanitarian affairs. Reports indicate that diseases such as cholera, typhoid and malaria are increasing and that there are cases of marasmus and kwashiorkor. We have no information specific to Baghdad.

We condemn the Iraqi regime for continuing to refuse United Nations offers to allow limited oil sales to pay for humanitarian supplies. Iraq's attempts to make political capital out of avoidable suffering are cynical.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 25 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 25 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Ministerial Conduct

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the rules governing the availability of financial support from Government for Ministers in respect of libel actions arising from events which took place before they took office; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Public resources may be used to deal only with matters which arise as a direct result of the official duties of Ministers.

Cabinet Secretary's Report

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the Cabinet Secretary's report into the allegations made by Mr. Al Fayed.

The Prime Minister: The text of the report is as follows.

"On 30 September you asked me to investigate certain allegations of impropriety against members of the Government, which had been brought to you in confidence on the previous evening and which, you were told, derived from Mr. Mohammed Al Fayed.

In reporting these allegations the informant said that Mr. Al Fayed wanted a meeting with the Prime Minister, principally because of Mr. Al Fayed's wish to have the DTI Inspectors Report on the takeover of the House of Fraser revised or withdrawn. He had made a number of allegations against Government Ministers and was contemplating passing them to others.

You replied that it would be impossible for you to see Mr. Al Fayed in these circumstances. You added that, if Ministers had been guilty of wrong doing, you were not going to make any sort of deal, regardless of the cost to the Government's reputation. You said that you would consider how to proceed and suggested that in the meantime your informant should make no response to Mr. Al Fayed.

The following morning you asked me to investigate. I carried out some immediate enquiries and on the evening of 30 September your Private Secretary reported to you that some of the allegations were familiar because they had surfaced before, had been previously investigated and had been strongly denied. However, some allegations were new. You then asked me on 3 October to fol[illegible] up all the allegations, whether old or new, with the Ministers concerned.

I had conversations with the Ministers named in the allegations in the week before the Conservative Party Conference, and I reported to you the outcome of these conversations, together with the results of other inquiries I had made, on Monday 17 October on your return from Bournemouth. In the light of that report, you asked the Chief Whip and me to clarify some points so that, in the interests of natural justice, there should be no risk of your acting unfairly. On 18 October, you concluded that Mr. Smith's offer of resignation form the Government should be accepted later in the week when the Chief Whip's and my action was complete.

I should make clear that, in view of the circumstances in which the information reached you, I have not felt able to approach or interview Mr. Mohammed Al Fayed himself. I was reinforced in that view by information subsequently received that Mr. Mohammed Al Fayed has made available to others the information which was provided to you. It can therefore be assumed that if there is any further material which Mr. Al Fayed may have to substantiate his allegations it will come to light.

While the Chief Whip and I were taking the further steps agreed at your meeting on 17 October, two of the allegations passed on to you were made public in The Guardian of Thursday 20 October. These were that Mr. Neil Hamilton and Mr. Tim Smith were paid to raise questions on Mr. Al Fayed's behalf in the House of Commons.

I had previously enquired into both these matters and had asked Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Smith about them. Both sets of allegations may be the subject of other enquiries and, in the case of Mr. Hamilton, are the subject of legal proceedings against The Guardian newspaper. In these circumstances I should not deal with them in detail in this report, which I know that you envisage publishing.

Suffice it therefore to say here that Mr. Smith volunteered to me that, as he has subsequently confirmed publicly, he received payments from Mr. Al Fayed between 1987 and 1989, when he ended his activities on behalf of Mr. Al Fayed. He did not declare the necessary information in the Register of Members' Interests until just before the end of this period, and he acknowledged that he should have done so earlier. He offered his resignation from the Government.

Mr. Hamilton has emphatically denied throughout my inquiries, both in writing and subsequently in a public statement, that he received any payments deriving from Mr. Al Fayed. I have found no evidence which controverts Mr. Hamilton's assurances on these matters. He acknowledged that he had received hospitality from Mr. Al Fayed, as a private guest (as he believed), at a time well before he entered the Government. He had not thought it necessary to declare this in the Register of Members' Interests, for reasons which he explained in a letter to the Editor of the Guardian of more than a year ago, a copy of which he gave me. He also gave me an exchange of correspondence dated nearly a year ago in which he had amplified to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Members' Interests what he had said to the Guardian.

When Mr. Hamilton became a Minister in the Department of Trade and Industry, he declared his previous interest in matters concerning Mr. Al Fayed and has stood aside from involvement as a Minister in issues involving the House of Fraser.

There were other allegations passed on to you by your informant. I have looked into all these, so far as I am able, and the Chief Whip and I have put the allegations in detail to the Ministers concerned. In some of them there are patent inaccuracies, and all have been denied explicitly, unequivocally and in writing.

I have found nothing which would cause me to throw any doubt on the validity of those denials. Moreover, the fact that there is reason to think that these allegations too have now been made available to others who have so far chosen not to publish them suggests that they too may have found that there is a lack of evidence to establish their validity.

In those circumstances, while confirming that I am confident that the allegations either are demonstrably false, or, so far as I have been able to establish, are entirely unsubstantiated as well as being denied by the Ministers concerned, I do not think it appropriate to give them further currency by listing them in this Report.

South West Water

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Prime Minister if the statement made by the hon. member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) during his recent visit to the south-west, on the possibility of making Exchequer funding available to reduce water and sewerage charges in the South West Water company area represents the policy of Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Director-General of Water Services has recently completed the first periodic review of water company price limits. The new price limits that he announced for South West Water have been referred, at the company's request, to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. In the meantime, we must await the outcome of the commission's review.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Sproat: The total number of staff employed by the Department is 349, excluding casuals; all staff are employed in the London region. This figure excludes staff working in the Department's two executive agencies, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and the Royal Parks Agency. All the staff work in London.

New Millennium Commission

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what grounds he cancelled the contract of the nominated chairman of the Millennium Commission; and how much had been paid to him in regard to severance of his contract.

Mr. Dorrell: The decision to terminate the contract of the nominated chief executive of the Millennium Commission, Mr. Nicholas Hinton, was taken by the commission, which is independent of Government. The sum of £19,125 was paid to Mr. Hinton as compensation for loss of office in accordance with his contract of employment.

Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) when he expects to appoint management consultants to advise him on the Sports Council reorganisation;

(2) what he estimates to be the likely cost of management consultancy contracts for the Sports Council's reorganisation.

Mr. Sproat: The period of consultation on the Government's proposals ends on 31 October. I expect to announce final policy decisions and how these should be implemented shortly after that.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will extend the consultation period for the reorganisation of the Sports Council to consider the deep concern voiced by local authorities at his proposals.

Mr. Sproat: The consultation period has in effect already been extended from 30 September to 31 October through the addition of children's play to the consultation exercise. I do not propose to extend it further. I shall now be looking very carefully at the views expressed on our proposals before taking final policy decisions.

British Athletes (Income Support)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has made in respect of British athletes no longer having their income support stopped while they are competing for Britain abroad.

Mr. Sproat: I have met social security Ministers on two occasions to discuss the payment of income support to British athletes competing abroad.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Sproat: My Department currently employs seven press officers. All are based in the Department's offices in London.

EDUCATION

Class Sizes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the average class sizes in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools; and what were the corresponding figures five, 10 and 15 years ago.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average sizes of single teacher classes in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in 1979, 1984, 1989, and 1994—provisional—are shown in the table.

Average sizes of single teacher classes in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in 1979, 1984, 1989 and 1994 (provisional) Position in January each year

* data for secondary schools excluding Sixth Form Colleges is not available.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) her Department and (b) her agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each, the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Forth: The DFE has carried out the following public opinion surveys since October 1992.

Subject: Public perception of the national curriculum and the relative priorities of national curriculum subjects

Objective: To establish the opinion of the general public on the national curriculum and the relative priority of subjects within it
Date: June 1994

To give the cost of the research surveys carried out by the DFE and its agencies would compromise confidential tendering procedures.

Educational Psychologists

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education to what extent an educational psychologist employed by a local education authority retains professional autonomy in determining needs under the Education Act 1993; and what guidance her Department gives on how financial constraints may be taken into account under the LEA.

Mr Forth: The conditions of employment of education psychologists are a matter for the authorities which employ them.

Under the Education Act 1993 and the Education (Special Education Needs) Regulations 1994, an authority must seek psychological advice as part of any multi-professional statutory assessment of a child with special educational needs. If, as a result of a full assessment, and of any representations made by the child's parents, it is necessary for an authority to determine the provision which the child needs, then a statement of special educational needs must be made. The statement must specify the necessary provision, and the authority must arrange that it is made, whatever the funding implications, unless the child's parent makes suitable alternative arrangements.

The code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs provides comprehensive practical guidance to LEAs and the governing bodies of all maintained schools on their responsibilities towards all children with special educational needs. All those to whom the code applies have a statutory duty to have regard to it. The code provides a framework which aims at quality and consistency of assessment, both across and within LEAs. Having regard to the code, many LEAs have issued additional guidance to schools and support services on specific criteria to be used to achieve such consistency.

Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when the Further and Higher Education Council first received an application from the Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute for additional funding in 1994–95; and when the application will be determined.

Mr. Boswell: I understand that the Further Education Funding Council received an application from this institute in May and a duplicate application in August. I understand that the council notified the institute of its final recurrent funding allocation for 1994–95 on 14 September.

Disruptive Pupils

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent discussions she has held concerning a strategy to deal with disruptive and troubled children in schools; and what conclusion she has reached thereon.

Mr. Forth: Following very wide consultations, the Department issued a set of circulars in May giving guidance on pupil behaviour and discipline, the education of children with emotional and behavioural difficulties, and other subjects within the broad heading "Pupils with Problems". Children with emotional and behavioural difficulties have special educational needs and the circular complements provisions in the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. Local education authorities must have regard to the code which came into effect on 1 September. Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Student Grants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the rates of university students' grants in 1978–79 and each subsequent year in cash terms, real terms and as a proportion of average earnings.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is shown in the table.

Value of The Standard Maintenance Grant and Grant Plus Loan

Academic Years	Standard maintenance grant (cash terms) £[1]	Standard maintenance grant plus loan (cash terms) £[2]	Standard maintenance grant (real terms) £[3]	Standard maintenance grant plus loan (real terms) £	Standard maintenance grant as a percentage of average earnings[5]	Standard maintenance grant plus loan as a percentage of average earnings

[1] The standard maintenance grant rate is that applicable to students living away from home and studying outside London. In 1994–95 the corresponding London rate of grant is £2,560 and the parental home rate of grant is £1,615.

[2] Since 1990–91 student support has included grant and loan; the grant was frozen at the 1990–92 level (ie £2,265) until 1994–85 when it was reduced to £2,040. Figures for 1990–91 and subsequent years include grant plus full year loan for students living away from home. The full year loan for students studying in London in 1994–95 is £1,375 and £915 for those living at their parents' home.

[4] Up to and including 1983–84 students claimed, and were individually reimbursed, full travelling expenses; from 1984–85 a flat rate amount for travelling costs was incorporated within the main rate of grant. The rates of grant for 1983–84 and earlier years exclude the excess travelling expense element.

[5] Average annual earnings approximated from weekly earnings in April from the New Earnings Survey of full-time employees whose pay for the survey pay period was not affected by absence. This survey may not include bonuses paid at other weeks than the survey week and does not capture seasonal work. For 1979–80—1982–83 earnings are compiled on the basis of men aged 21 + and women aged 18 +. From 1983–84 earnings are compiled on the basis of employees on adult rates.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the number of press officers currently employed by her Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Forth: The Department currently employs 12 press officers at its headquarters in London. None are employed at the House or any other location.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantities of low level radioactive waste have been co-disposed in landfills since 1979; and what proposals exist to increase the amounts.

Mr. Atkins: Records of the quantities of such disposals are not held centrally.

The Government's consultation paper, "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", proposed that there would be advantage in encouraging waste producers to make greater use of the controlled burial of low-level radioactive waste. Responses on this and other issues raised in the review are being carefully considered.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what contribution the United Kingdom has made to the preparation of an international convention on waste management being developed under the International Atomic Energy Agency's radioactive waste safety standards programme;

(2) what steps Her Majesty's Government plans to take to fulfil the resolutions agreed at the International Atomic Energy Agency 38th annual conference in Vienna in September calling for an assessment by IAEA member states of the impact of the sea disposal of radioactive wastes.

Mr. Atkins: The 38th general conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency resolved on 21 September this year to invite the board of governors and the director general to commence preparations for a convention on the safety of radioactive waste management. It also invited them to consider further measures that would enhance international co-operation in this field, including assessment of the impact of the land and sea disposal of wastes. I expect that the United Kingdom will participate fully, as is appropriate, in such work. As regards the International Atomic Energy Agency's radioactive waste safety standards programme, which is aimed at securing international consensus on technical and regulatory aspects of radioactive waste management, the United Kingdom has participated fully, and continues to do so.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to amend the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 enabling landfill tips, including those located in Bradford, West Yorkshire, to take nuclear waste; and if he will made a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Government have no plans to amend the provisions in the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 concerning the controlled burial of low-level radioactive waste in landfill sites. The consultation paper, "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", proposed that there would be advantage in encouraging waste producers to make greater use of the existing controlled burial provisions. Responses on this and other issues raised in the review are being carefully considered. There are no plans in relation to particular sites.

Waste Management

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to investigate, or to require Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to investigate the import of wastes from Germany for incineration at the Edmonton incineration plant; and if he will investigate the activities of the International Waste Consultants, brokers for the import of German waste.

Mr. Atkins: I am aware that contracts exist for the import of garage waste for disposal at the North London waste authority's incinerator in Edmonton. The circumstances surrounding these contracts are under investigation by the NLWA and the London waste regulation authority. I am sure that these authorities are taking the appropriate action to protect human health and the environment.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the paper by David Massingham of his Department, presented at the waste management forum at the Institution of Civil Engineers on 22 September.

Mr. Atkins: On 22 September, the Waste Management Forum held a half-day seminar on the Environment Select Committee's report on recycling, under the title "Recycling Reappraised". Mr Massingham of my Department attended, and was among a number of people invited to comment briefly as a focus for discussion. No formal paper was prepared for this occasion, but the main points made at the seminar are contained in the report prepared by the Waste Management forum, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many visits have been paid to the United Kingdom, and for what purpose, by the International Atomic Energy Agency's waste management advisory programme.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contracts have been issued by his Department for the assessment of the applicability to waste management policy of life-cycle analysis.

Mr. Atkins: I am pleased to announce that my Department has issued recently a contract to develop a methodology for the life cycle analysis of waste management options for different wastes.

This contract is the first part of a major project under the Department's waste research programme. The project will provide an analysis of the environmental costs and benefits of different wastes management options over the entire life cycles of selected wastes. The results from the project are intended to inform waste management policy at both the national and local level.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent communications his Department has had with the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee on the options for returning to countries of origin radioactive wastes arising from spent fuel reprocessed at Sellafield and Dounreay.

Mr. Atkins: The chairman of the radioactive waste management advisory committee wrote to me on 4 July with further advice on British Nuclear Fuels' proposals for waste substitution. A copy of the committee's advice was appended to the consultation document, "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", which the Department published on 5 August.

Regional Assistance, Wirral

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to change the present strategy of regional assistance as it affects the Wirral.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government's view of the assisted areas map, which defines those parts of Great Britain eligible for regional assistance, was completed last year. The new map reconfirmed Wirral's development area status for regional assistance purposes, and the Government, do not propose to review the assisted areas again for at least two years.

Sewage Works

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the record of compliance of sewage works with their discharge consents in (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority has reported that in 1992 95 per cent. of the water company sewage treatment works it monitored complied with their discharge consent standards, and that in 1993, the figure was 93 per cent. Because of new reporting procedures introduced by the NRA, the information for 1993 is not directly comparable with earlier statistics. The underlying trend is one of significant improvements in performance:

only 83 per cent. of sewage works complied in 1988. This reflects the water industry's substantial investment programmes since privatisation.

Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many houses recorded in the 1994 housing investment programme data as being empty in the (a) council, (b) housing association, (c) public and (d) private sectors; and what percentage of the overall stock this represents;

(2) how many households are recorded in the 1994 housing investment programme data collected by local authorities as being on council waiting lists (a) nationally and (b) by region.

Mr. Curry: The data provided by local authorities on their 1994 housing investment programme—HIP1—returns is still being analysed. I will write to the hon. Member when this work is complete.

Landlord and Tenant Act

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to monitor the effectiveness of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: A research report, commissioned by my Department, entitled "The Landlord and Tenant Act 1987: Awareness, Experience and Impact", was published by HMSO in 1991.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications in respect of homeless persons have been made to local authorities since 1979; and what proportion of these were accepted for rehousing as statutorily homeless.

Mr. Curry: The application figures for individual authorities, where they are reported, are published in the quarterly local housing statistics publication along with the figures for acceptances.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the position of a homeless family will differ from the current situation as a result of proposals contained in the statement on access to local authority housing and explanations of its intent given in written answers to questions 15, 20 and 27.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The court's interpretation of part III of the Housing Act 1985 has the effect of requiring local authorities to secure a tenancy for life for an eligible homeless household. Under our reform proposals the duty would be to secure accommodation for at least 12 months; that duty would recur if the household continued to be eligible for assistance.

Rents

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average weekly rent paid by people earning less than £10,000 in each year since 1990.

Mr. Curry: Estimates of the average rent paid by households in England headed by people with annual incomes less than £10,000 are as follows

Average weekly rents, before and after deduction of housing benefit

	Before deduction of HB	£ per week After deduction of HB
1990	28·10	15·60
1991	30·10	14·80
1992	35·10	16·00
1993	39·60	16·90

These figures are from the Family Expenditure Survey and are subject to sampling error.

The estimates do not take into account the income of householders other than the head of household, and information is not available to enable the calculation of average rents paid by households with incomes less than £10,000 per annum.

Leasehold Enfranchisement

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to monitor the take up of the leasehold enfranchisement provisions of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Leasehold enfranchisement is a private transaction between the leaseholders and the landlord, and it is therefore not possible to monitor take up comprehensively. But my Department does monitor the number of cases coming before leasehold valuation tribunals where the parties cannot agree terms. Currently 32 cases have been heard or are listed to be heard in the near future.

We are about to let a research contract to follow up the experiences and progress of those who have approached the Leasehold Advisory Service, which has been established jointly by the Department and the private sector. To date it has received about 3,000 inquiries.

Mr. Curry: The information requested on right to buy sales is not held centrally.

However, figures of receipts from sales of all council dwellings and the discounts allowed are collected by the Department. Data on the value of these sales and the average percentage discount given are shown in the table.

Merseyside Port

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role he has in connection with proposed new port facilities by the Merseyside development corporation; what effect these proposed facilities will have on sea traffic from Belfast to the north-west of England; what interests from outside the United Kingdom are involved in the provision or operation of these proposed facilities; what funding the proposed project will receive from the European Community; and if he will make a statement about these proposals by the Merseyside development corporation.

Sir Paul Beresford: Merseyside development corporation, which is sponsored by this Department, has marketed a 55-acre riverside at Twelve Quays, Birkenhead, for a business park and an in-river ro-ro terminal. I am encouraged by the interest that has been shown in the proposed ferry terminal.

MDC has given preferred developer status for the site to London and General, acting with Capital and Regional Properties, which are both United Kingdom development companies.

The corporation's disposal of the site is a matter for the MDC to determine in accordance with the Department's disposal guidelines. Any application for grant assistance that the developer may make to MDC will also be subject to approval in accordance with Departmental guidelines; similarly any application for European Community funding will be subject to the appraisal process for objective 1 funds.

Local Government Review

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest position on the local government review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have today written to Sir John Banham, chairman of the Local Government Commission for England, giving my decisions on the Commission's recommendations for Avon, Humberside Lincolnshire, North Yorkshire and Somerset as set out in its reports "Final Recommendations on the Future Local Government of Avon, Gloucestershire and Somerset" and "Final Recommendations on the Future Local Government of North Yorkshire, Humberside and Lincolnshire". I announced my decision, on 1 March, to ask the Commission to undertake a further review of Gloucestershire.

AVON AND SOMERSET

Avon

I have carefully considered the Commission's recommendations for both Avon and Somerset counties and the many representations which have been made about them. I have concluded, for Avon, that abolishing Avon County Council and establishing four unitary authorities for the area (Commission recommendations 1, 2, and 3), would best reflect local identities and interests and achieve effective and convenient local government. I propose to accept Commission recommendations 8 to 12 (on strategic planning and electoral arrangements) for Avon as submitted.

I am still considering the recommendation (Commission recommendation 16) that a town council should be established for the unparished area of Weston-super-Mare. I am also still considering whether to ask the Commission to conduct a review of electoral arrangements in the area before its normal statutory periodic review. I support recommendation (Commission recommendation 18) about consultation between principal authorities and parish and town councils, but, this is for the relevant principal authorities to take forward.

Somerset

The Commission has recommended a move to a structure of three unitary authorities in Somerset (Commission recommendations 6). However, after taking account of the number and strength of the representations which I received opposing the recommendations and the lack of support for the alternative options considered by the Commission in its draft report, I have concluded that to retain the present two-tier system would best reflect local identities and interests and achieve effective and convenient local government in Somerset. I have therefore decided not to accept this recommendation. Consequently I am also rejecting recommendations 8 (in so far as it applies to Somerset) and 13 to 15. I am still considering the recommendation (Commission recommendation 17) that a town council should be established for the unparished area of Bridgwater.

Fire and Police Services

My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, is making a separate announcement about the arrangements for the Fire and Police Services in Avon and Somerset (Commission recommendation 7).

Ceremonial Issues

As regards ceremonial issues (Commission recommendation 4), I do not have the power to include unitary authorities in counties where the two tier structure is to be retained. I am therefore obliged to modify some of the Commission's recommendations in this respect. The Commission recommended that the County of Avon, should for ceremonial purposes be divided between Gloucestershire and Somerset, with Bristol as a separate city and county. I propose to establish Bristol as a separate county, and to deem that for ceremonial purposes the unitary authorities of North West Somerset and Bath and North East Somerset should be part of Somerset. It is not possible to make a final decision on the nature of the ceremonial arrangements for South Gloucestershire until the outcome of the Commission's further review of Gloucestershire is known. However, I am minded that, by deeming or otherwise, the South Gloucesterhsire unitary authority and the present county area of Gloucestershire should be united for ceremonial purposes.

HUMBERSIDE, LINCOLNSHIRE AND NORTH YORKSHIRE

Humberside

In its report "Final Recommendations on the Future Local Government of North Yorkshire, Humberside and Lincolnshire", for Humberside, the Commission has recommended the abolition of both the County Council and the County of Humberside and their replacement with four unitary authorities (Commission recommendation 1). I have concluded that, subject to some minor modifications, effective and efficient local government and local identities and interest would best be served by accepting the Commission's main recommendation. I propose to accept the recommendation (Commission recommendation 2) that a unitary authority be established upon the present boundaries of the City of Kingston upon Hull. However, because I take the view that the present boundaries of the City may be too tightly drawn, I intend to direct the Commission to undertake a further review of the City's boundaries with the East Yorkshire unitary authority in due course. I also accept the recommendations (Commission recommendations 3, 11 and 12) for three unitary authorities covering the greater part of the rest of Humberside. However, because of my decision not to accept recommendation 8, the reasons for which are set out below, I propose that Goole, the remaining part of Boothferry, should be incorporated in Selby district in North Yorkshire.

I propose to accept the recommendations (Commission recommendations 16, 17, 21, 22 and 25) covering the electoral arrangements for authorities in Humberside. However, I am still considering whether to ask the Commission to conduct a review of electoral arrangements in the area before its normal statutory periodic review. I am also still looking at whether there should be a review to consider the scope for further emparishment in the area (Commission recommendation 24). I support the recommendation (Commission recommendation 23) about consultation between principal authorities and parish and town councils, but again, this is for the relevant principal authorities to take forward.

On Commission recommendation 4, because of my decision to abolish the County of Humberside, the statutory requirement for all authorities to be within a county area, I have decided that, for ceremonial purposes, the City of Hull and East Yorkshire unitary authorities should be included in a new county area to be known as East Riding of Yorkshire.

I have decided to accept the Commission's recommendation for no change to the existing structure in Lincolnshire, and my reasons for doing this are dealt with below. I do not have the power to include unitary authorities in counties where the two tier structure is to be retained (Commission recommendation 10). I am therefore obliged to modify some of the Commission's recommendations in this respect. However, for ceremonial and related purposes I propose to accept the Commission's recommendation that the two authorities south of the Humber should be deemed to be part of Lincolnshire.

I propose to accept the recommendations (Commission recommendations 26 and 27) for minor changes to parish boundaries.

Lincolnshire

The Commission has recommended retaining the present two-tier structure in Lincolnshire (Commission recommendation 13). I have looked closely at this recommendation. The Commission found little support for change in the County, and where there was support, no consensus about what form any change should take. This view is supported by the representations which I have received, and I have, therefore, concluded that I should accept the Commission's recommendation.

North Yorkshire

In North Yorkshire, the Commission has recommended the abolition of the County Council and that the existing eight districts should be combined to form three unitary authorities (Commission recommendations 5 to 8). I have decided to accept the recommendation that a unitary authority be established for the City of York, with its boundaries extended to include the Greater Planning Area (Commission recommendation 76). The Commission identified evidence of strong community identity amongst its residents and support for unitary status and I agree that the residents and support for unitary status and I agree that the present boundary is particularly restrictive. Because of the significant increase in the size of the City, in terms of the area it will cover, its population, and the additional functions for which it will become responsible, I have concluded that a unitary York will be considered a new and not a continuing authority. However, in the light of the strong representations which I have received opposing the Commission's recommendations for North and West Riding authorities (Commission recommendations 6 and 8), and in the absence of any consensus about alternatives, I have concluded that to retain the present two-tier system would best reflect local identities and interests and achieve effective and convenient local government in North Yorkshire outside the City of York. I have therefore decided to reject the recommendation for these two authorities and to retain the two-tier system in the remainder of North Yorkshire. A small number of district wards and county divisions would be split by the proposed boundary changes and it will be necessary to consult the authorities concerned about how the areas remaining outside York should be combined with other wards or divisions.

I have decided to accept the recommendations (Commission recommendation 19 and 25) covering the electoral arrangements for the new unitary authority for the City of York. However, as a consequence of my decision not to introduce unitary authorities elsewhere in North Yorkshire I shall not be accepting recommendations 18 and 20.

Planning

I am still considering the recommendations for planning (Commission recommendation 15) in the three counties in the light of my decisions about local government structure in the area.

Police and Fire Service

My Right hon. and Learned Friend, the Home Secretary, is making a separate announcement about the arrangements for the Fire and Police Services in these three counties (Commission recommendation 14).

Ceremonial Issues

I propose to deem the unitary authority for the City of York to be part of North Yorkshire for ceremonial and related purposes.

Implementation

In all areas where I am agreeing with the establishment of unitary authorities, I have given careful consideration to representations which I received about the implications for those services and functions currently performed on a wider basis. My decisions are based on the presumption that the authorities which are to become unitary will work together, and where relevant with existing authorities, to plan for these services and functions, and will forge effective links with other bodies such as health authorities.

Once I have had the opportunity to consult the affected local authorities, orders giving effect to the Commission's recommendations for these counties, with the aforementioned modifications, will be laid before the House. I intend that elections to unitary authorities in these counties should be held next May, with them assuming full responsibility for their new functions from 1 April 1996. A copy of my letter to Sir John Banham has been placed in the Library.

Conclusion

My decisions mean that nine further unitary authorities will be established from April 1996. Local people in these areas will enjoy the benefits which we believe that unitary local government brings; improved accountability and understanding of where responsibility for services lies; less duplication and improved cost-effectiveness; and improved quality and co-ordination of local services. Where there is to be change, I believe that the costs of change will be justified by the savings and other benefits which it will bring. Elsewhere, where I have judged that this would best provide efficient and effective local government which reflects local identities, I have decided to retain the present two-tier system. This diversity reflects our determination not to impose a uniform structure on local government in England. Instead, we wish to see the structure which works best for each area, which reflects the local preferences, history and tradition, and meets the needs and wishes of local people.

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the soundness of data from the new earnings survey as the basis for area cost adjustment.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The New Earnings Survey is a well-established and comprehensive survey of earnings across the country. It is, therefore, a very suitable basis for establishing the relative wage rates paid in different regions in occupations relevant to local authorities. The sample numbers in the survey are, however, not large enough to produce reliable estimates of wage rates in individual local authorities. For this reason, the area cost adjustment is calculated at a regional level.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the effect on counties in the east midlands of removing £1·5 billion distributed through area cost adjustment to counties in the south east and dividing the proceeds to increase the general amount of the standard spending assessment of every other county and metropolitan authority outside the south east.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The table shows the effect on the standard spending assessments of counties in the East Midlands, if SSAs in 1994–95 had been calculated without applying the area cost adjustment to authorities in London and the South East, but with no other change either to the national total of SSAs, or to the detailed formulae applied to each service.

	Actual 1994–95 SSA £ million	SSA with no area cost adjustment £ million	*Change in SSA £ million
Derbyshire	553	576	23
Leicestershire	561	584	23
Lincolnshire	365	380	15
Northamptonshire	364	37	15
Nottinghamshire	627	653	27

* figures may not sum due to rounding to nearest pound million

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the area cost adjustment element of standard spending assessment.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Various aspects of the area cost adjustment have been considered this year by the SSA sub-group, which is the main forum in which technical issues affecting standard spending assessments are discussed between government officials and local authority representatives. Ministers are considering the options which have been put forward and will be announcing their proposals for 1995–96 later in the year.

Standard Spending Assessment

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage increase in standard spending assessment for counties in each English region from 1989–90 to 1994–95; and what were the percentage increases for all English counties and for all local authorities in England over the same period.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The first year of Standard Spending Assessments was 1990–91. Comparative figures for 1990–91 and 1994–95 for non-metropolitan county councils, which make no allowance for changes in function, are:

	1990–91 £ million	1994–95 £ million	Change
Northern	1,029·163	1,273·801	+23·8 per cent.
North West	1,217·646	1,477·878	+21·4 per cent.
Yorkshire and Humberside	798·783	976·481	+22·2 per cent.
East Midlands	2,014·564	2,469·158	+22·6 per cent.
West Midlands	1,251·442	1,530·181	+22·3 per cent.
East Anglia	966·003	1,216·725	+26·0 per cent.
South West	2,207·561	2,757·969	+24·9 per cent.
South East (outside Greater London)	5,152·553	6,629·815	+28·7 per cent.
Total shire counties	14,637·716	18,332·008	+25·2 per cent.
All local authorities	29,805·300	37,847·700	+27·0 per cent.

Basic Credit Approvals

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what basic credit approval was given to east midlands counties in each year since 1992–93; and if he will express this as a percentage of total county basic credit approvals for these years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is given in the table.

Basic credit approvals issued to east midlands counties 1992–93 to 1994–95

County	1992-93 £ 000	1993-94 £ 000	1994-95 £ 000
Derbyshire	18,840	16,228	8,878
Leicestershire	17,926	14,145	12,334
Lincolnshire	16,076	14,034	13,426
Northamptonshire	7,631	4,974	6,903
Nottinghamshire	12,013	9,599	7,101
Total	72,486	58,980	48,642
Percentage of total BCAs for all counties	13·1	12·6	9·7

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Sir Paul Beresford: There are currently 31 information officers employed by the Department of Environment including those employed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. All deal with the full range of information services; none are exclusively press officers. These staff are all located in London. None are employed in the House.

Additionally officers are employed in an information role in the various agencies directly accountable to the Department.

Regional services in England are provided by the Central Office of Information.

Right-to-buy Legislation

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the money realised from the sale of houses under the right-to-buy legislation has been used by local authorities to pay off their outstanding debts.

Mr. Curry: Information on the value of receipts from right-to-buy sales and on how they are used by local authorities are not held centrally by the Department.

However, figures of receipts from sales of council dwellings to sitting tenants are collected by the Department and these show that between the introduction of right to buy in 1980 and the end of March 1994 the total value of such sitting tenant sales, net of discount, is an estimated £18·5 billion.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his proposals are for extending compulsory competitive tendering to local authority information technology services and finance services.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for the Environment announced to the House the Government's decisions on proposals to extend compulsory competitive tendering to local authority and other defined authorities white-collar corporate and professional services on November 10 1992 at column 744. He undertook that the Government would discuss details of implementing these decisions with representatives of local government and other interested parties. Since then, my officials have had very useful discussions with the local authority associations, the Audit Commission and CIPFA on a number of joint working groups, and with a number of other representative bodies.

We are today issuing two consultation documents inviting comments on the Government's detailed proposals for extending CCT to local authority Information Technology services, and to finance services.

Following consultation on CCT for legal and construction and property services, Orders were tabled before the House in June and July this year for legal and construction and property services respectively. The papers issued today on IT and finance services will be followed later this year by our detailed proposals for personnel and corporate and administrative services.

Copies of today's consultation papers will be placed in the Library. They include a definition of each service which includes the provision of a range of IT and finance services but does not capture the users of IT services and excludes financial tasks carried out as part of the normal duties of managers and other administrative staff whose primary responsibility is to a service other than a financial one.

We recognise that not all of this work is necessarily suited to competitive tendering and potential contracting out. For this reason we propose that local authorities be permitted to carry out up to 30 per cent. by value, of IT work using their own staff without going through competition, all authorities being able to retain a minimum of £300,000 worth of work in-house and free of competitive tendering. This recognises that certain work must be retained in-house both to enable an authority to fulfil its democratic responsibilities and to act as an expert client for bought-in services.

Similarly, for finance services we propose that the authorities be able to retain 65 per cent. by value of work, with a de minimis exemption of £300,000. An authority will not be able to award any of the remaining 70 per cent. of IT work or 35 per cent. of finance work, to their own staff unless they have won it in fair and open competition.

As with legal and professional construction and property services, the consultation papers also give details of modifications which we intend to make top the statutory framework for competitive tendering to ensure that authorities will continue to be able to deliver services in a way which meets their own operational objectives.

Following consideration of comments received on the proposals included in this consultation document, I will submit to the House the statutory instruments required under the Local Government Act 1988 to give effect to our proposals. I anticipate that, subject to the conclusions we draw from consultation and to parliamentary approval of the relevant order, CCT for Finance services will take effect from 1 October 1996 in metropolitan districts, London boroughs and certain other defined authorities and that CCT for IT services will come into effect one year later than originally proposed, from 1 October 1997. This will place IT CCT at the end of the extension programme, allowing authorities, if they wish, to deal with market testing of IT work once the outcome of competition for services which are the principal customers for IT is clear.

For counties and shire districts CCT for both services will take effect once the Local Government Commission's review of local authority structure has been completed and, where appropriate, changes have been made. CCT for these services for the new police authorities will be subject to separate consultation.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales are issuing separate consultation papers. The proposals contained therein follow much of what I have outlined above, although implementation dates will take account of the programme for local government restructuring in both those countries. A separate consultation exercise is currently taking place in Scotland on the timetable for Scottish authorities.

Experience with the manual services already subject to CCT has shown that competition brings not only financial savings, but also significant improvements in the management, efficiency and quality of public services. I fully expect that CCT will bring the same benefits to IT, finance and other white-collar work.

Construction Industry (Corporation Tax)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of corporation tax was paid by the construction sector in each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: I have been asked to reply.

Corporation tax paid by companies in the construction sector is as follows:

1979–80	130
1980–81	140
1981–82	160
1982–83	200
1983–84	230
1984–85	250
1985–86	320
1986–87	370
1987–88	570
1988–89	820
1989–90	1,270
1990–91	1,240
1991–92	890
1992–93	710
1993–94	520

Notes:

Figures for 1985–86 and earlier years are estimates based on corporation tax liability.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on his plans for legislation applying the requirement to conduct environmental impact assessments under directive 85/337/EEC specifically to offshore oil and gas exploration, appraisal or production projects;

(2) in what way current United Kingdom legislation applies the requirement to conduct environmental impact assessments under directive 85/337/EEC specifically to offshore oil and gas exploration, appraisal or production projects.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answers 24 October 1994]: Environmental assessments are required by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry before consent is given in respect of the operation of any offshore oil or gas production installation within 25 miles of the coast. In addition, beyond 25 miles, environmental assessments are required for production installations in environmentally sensitive areas identified in consultation with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistical method is used by the Leeds development corporation in calculating the number of jobs created; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The number of jobs created is calculated annually by economic consultants employed by Leeds development corporation. Figures are derived from a survey of all completed developments, both new-build and conversions, within the urban development area, to establish how many full-time equivalent jobs have been created.

EC Directives

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what United Kingdom legislation implements the environmental impact assessments Directive (85/337/EEC) with respect to projects which do not fall within the planning process and are not governed by the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 (SI No. 1199).

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The main regulations which implement Directive 85/337/EEC in the United Kingdom for projects which are not governed by the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 (SI No. 1199) are as follows:

Environmental Assessment (Scotland) Regulations 1988 (SI No. 1221 (S. 122))

Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 (SI No. 3160 (NI 15)) Article 67)

A number of minor amending regulations have also been issued.

"Quality in Town and Country"

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those individuals and organisations who responded to the document, "Quality in Town and Country;" and if he will place copies of these responses in the Library.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 17 October 1994]: Yes. A list of responses received, excluding any who asked that their response be confidential, will be placed in the Libraries of the House on 1 November. Copies of individual responses will be available through the Library once our analysis of them has been completed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Sir John Wheeler: The amount spent on hospitality by (a) the Northern Ireland Office and NI Departments and (b) their agencies for each year since 1990 is as follows:

Hualon Corporation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his Department has yet made a full response to the points which were raised with him at his meeting on 11 August with the representatives of the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance in connection with the proposed grant to the Hualon corporation in connection with the development of new textile facilities in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 October 1994]: My right hon. and learned Friend responded in full to the points raised at the 11 August meeting by way of letter to my hon. Friend dated 11 October 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what recent representations he has received concerning the proposed grant to the Hualon Corporation in connection with the development of new textile facilities in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Apart from meeting the hon. Member and two representatives from Coats Viyella and Council of British Cotton textiles since July 1994, Ministers have received two written representations—both from individuals.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Guatemala

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the immediate resettlement of refugees returning to Guatemala under the terms of the 8 October 1992 accord, and to support the establishment and work of the Technical Commission agreed to under the 17 June 1994 accord for the resettlement of populations displaced by the armed conflict.

Mr. Baldry: We are major contributors both bilaterally and through the EU to UNHCR who continue to play an important role in the repatriation process. We have urged all sides to ensure that returnees can do so safely, to areas where adequate advance provision has been made for their reception. Together with EU partners we have made clear our intention to play a full part in supporting the peace process, including the resettlement of displaced persons.

Indonesia

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid is being allotted to Indonesia in the current financial year.

Mr. Baldry: In 1994–95 we expect to spend about £40 million in Indonesia under the bilateral aid programme.

Population and Development Conference

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he intends to take following the final resolutions of the Cairo international conference on population and development.

Mr. Baldry: We will be seeking to identify sound projects in population and reproductive health field so that by the end of next year we will have committed the £100 million of aid announced in July by my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development. We will extend access to reproductive health services through intensified co-operation with the United Nations population fund and our other partners, including the private sector.

The Gambia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European counterparts regarding aid to The Gambia.

Mr. Baldry: We have had extensive discussions with our European partners. On 12 October the EU announced that, in the absence of a timetable for an early return to constitutional government, they were suspending all military co-operation and balance of payments support to The Gambia; and would review new aid projects on a case by case basis.

Rwanda

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much bilateral aid has been allocated to Rwanda since April.

Mr. Baldry: We have committed £60 million for Rwandan displaced and refugees in neighbouring countries since April 1994; £33 million of this is bilateral emergency aid and £27 million is our share of EC aid.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is providing to the Governments of Zaire, Tanzania and Uganda to help them to cope with the influx of refugees from Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: Our emergency aid is normally provided to operational field agencies. Almost all our £33 million bilateral emergency aid has been allocated through such agencies for relief activities and to encourage the safe return of refugees to Rwanda, which is the best help that we can give to neighbouring countries.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps he is taking to assist with the voluntary repatriation of refugees to Rwanda;

(2) what assistance is being given to the new Government of Rwanda to assist with rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Mr. Baldry: Our present emphasis is to help create conditions within Rwanda which will encourage refugees to return. Thus we have recently provided over £2 million to NGOs involved in immediate rehabilitation, including seeds and tools provision, restarting of health care services and tracing and registration of unaccompanied children. In addition, £100,000 of equipment has been provided towards the re-establishment of the Rwanda Ministries of Health and of Rehabilitation and Social Integration.

We have also made grants to UNHCR and the International Organisation for Migration, who are helping refugees return to Rwanda.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other aid donor Governments regarding provision of financial compensation to the Government of Tanzania for the environmental degradation caused by the influx of refugees from Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: None. However, we recognise the importance of mitigating environmental degradation and have provided £35,000 to the non-governmental organisation, CARE, in support of an environmental impact assessment.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom is providing to the Government of Rwanda in re-establishing and training a civilian police force.

Mr. Baldry: In response to a request from the Government of Rwanda, a training programme, aimed at providing trainees with a basic knowledge of routine and investigative police work to enable them to address the immediate law and order problems in Kigali is now under way under UNAMIR auspices.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom is providing in the clearance of land mines in Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: In response to a UN request, we provided mine detecting equipment valued at £30,000 to assist in the training of Rwandan teams. We are awaiting the outcome of current UN assessments.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Operation Lifeline Sudan has been able to send humanitarian aid to northern Bahr al Ghazal in Sudan; and what reports he has on the physical condition of the people in the region.

Mr. Baldry: Between January and August Operation Lifeline Sudan delivered 3,741 tonnes of food aid to more than 105,000 beneficiaries in Bahr el Ghazal as well as health care, seeds, tools and fishing equipment and veterinary care to promote food security. The rains have brought good prospects for harvests and pastures.

OLS is currently assessing humanitarian needs in the region to plan future inputs. The results should be available by the end of this month.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in gaining access for international humanitarian agencies to the Nuba mountains in Sudan.

Mr. Baldry: There has been no significant change to the structure of relief aid since the answer that my hon. Friend the Under Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member on 10 May 1994 at column 79. However, assessments of 1994–95 humanitarian needs are now taking place at several locations in the transitional zone with participation from United Nations humanitarian agencies.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to amend the procedures relating to the aid and trade provision in the light of the findings of the Foreign Affairs Committee in its third report of Session 1993–94.

Mr. Baldry: The Government set out our detailed observations in our response, Cm 2672, to the Foreign Affairs Committee's report. The Committee concluded that in principle the thrust of the reforms introduced in June 1993 following the ATP review was to be broadly welcomed, and that the ATP should continue. The Government have no immediate plans for further amendments to the procedures for operating the ATP, but they remain under constant review.

Jordan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any debts from Jordan to Britain have been written off since the Israeli-Jordanian peace accord; and what future plans there are for such writing-off.

Mr. Baldry: All aid debts owed by Jordan to Britain have been forgiven following the Washington declaration by Israel and Jordan. There are currently no plans for further forgiveness of other official Jordanian debt.

Refugee Camps, Zaire

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom is providing with security arrangements for aid workers in the refugee camps at Goma in Zaire.

Mr. Baldry: We have received no requests from aid workers for assistance in security arrangements, but we are closely monitoring situation reports from UN officials and remain in regular contact with aid organisations working in Goma.

Pergau Dam

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the consortium of British companies involved in the Pergau hydro-electric project in the light of his observations on the third report from the Foreign Affairs Committee of Session 1993–94 (Cm 2672).

Mr. Baldry: None.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Jack: The following amounts have been spent on official hospitality in each year since 1990–91:

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Jack: MAFF employs a chief press officer and six press officers, all of whom are based at the Department's headquarters in Whitehall place, London.

Milk Deliveries

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the figures for the amount of milk supplied to customers by doorstep deliveries in 1979, 1984, 1989 and the year to 30 June 1994, in terms of quantity in litres, value, and as a percentage of total milk sales.

Mr. Jack: The information for England and Wales is as follows:

Milk Marque

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure equity of treatment in the transitional period before vesting day for milk producers who have contracted to Milk Marque and those who have not.

Mr. Jack: In the period between now and vesting day the milk marketing scheme remains in force. It would be unlawful for the milk marketing board to discriminate arbitrarily between producers. The ministry is continuing to monitor the board's activities as required by EC regulations.

TRANSPORT

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement about the damage done to the gas main outside Wanstead station by workers on the

M11 link road and the consequences to the health of the local population of the resulting gas vapours;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposed M11 link road on rights in respect of the free movement of cattle in the Whipps Cross area; what proposals he has to restrict those rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: These questions are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 25 October 1994:

The Minister for Transport in London has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Questions about the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 Link Road since they are operational matters for the Highways Agency.

We are not intending to restrict the rights in respect of cattle in the Whipps Cross area, indeed, links across Epping Forest will be improved as a result of the Link Road. The layout of the existing Green Man Roundabout is being revised to accommodate slip roads to and from the Link Road which will pass under the junction in tunnel. As well as providing a special bridge over the Underground railway for pedestrians, equestrians, cyclists and cattle, a separate tunnel under the roundabout will allow safe passage, segregated from traffic, between the northern section of Epping Forest and Bush Wood and beyond to Wanstead Flats. This is a significant improvement on the existing situation where busy roads must be crossed. These proposals were fully discussed at the 1987 Public Inquiry into the Link Road.

In order to prevent cattle from straying on to the Link Road once it is opened, we are proposing to install cattle grids on the slip roads at the new Green Man Roundabout, having consulted the local authorities and the Conservators of Epping Forest.

The incident involving the gas pipe fracture at Mansfield Road was an unfortunate accident. The sub-contractor constructing a new sewer, was lowering a steel frame into a trench and hit a gas pipe at or close to a joint causing it to fracture. As a precautionary measure, British Gas sealed off the area, including Wanstead Station, while they repaired the pipe. It is our belief that there was little danger to the public as a result of the fracture, but we regret the inconvenience that was caused.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

(a) Department of Transport

1990–91 — £204,040
1991–92 — £170,015
1992–93 — £233,762
1993–94 — £234,986
1994–95 — [1]£63,969

(b) Agencies

1990–91 — £24,114
1991–92 — £30,216
1992–93 — £45,454
1993–94 — £59,850
1994–95 — [2]£64,692

Transport Statistics

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department published the 1994 edition of "Transport Statistics Great Britain;" what were the main trends established in the report; and to whom it has been circulated.

Mr. Watts: The 1994 edition of "Transport Statistics Great Britain" was published on 28 September. Copies of the report were distributed widely, and also deposited in the Libraries of the House. The main trends established in the report were listed in the press notice which accompanied the publication of the report.

Railway Investment

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much Railtrack will invest in track and signalling maintenance and repair in 1994–95;

(2) how much will be invested in track and signalling renewals and new build schemes on the British railway network in 1994–95.

Mr. Watts: In 1994–95 Railtrack expects to spend some £550 million on investment in track and signalling, including some £100 million for channel tunnel services; and some £800 million for the maintenance of track, signalling and telecommunications.

British Rail

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much (i) British Rail and (ii) Railtrack expect to spend this year on (a) lobbying Parliament and (b) press and public relations.

Mr. Watts: BR's headquarters public affairs department has a budget of £2·4m, but information in respect of individual business units, who have their own public affairs budgets as part of their overall management costs, is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Railtrack's headquarters press and public relations office has a budget of some £1 million. Neither has a special budget for lobbying Parliament.

Bedford-Bletchley Railway

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the use of the Bedford-Bletchley railway; and if he will give figures of the number of passengers who use the service and the profitability rating, after county council subsidy, of the cross-country link.

Mr. Watts: About 800 passengers use the Bedford-Bletchley services each weekday. No notice of any proposal to withdraw these services has been given. The financial performance of the services is a matter for the British Railways Board.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to undertake a complete camera inspection of the located wreck of MV 'Derbyshire'; and what assessment he has made of the relevance of such an inspection to future building and operational safety for ships of this type.

Mr. Norris: The marine accident investigation branch has been considering the sonar and video material supplied by the International Transport Workers Federation. We expect to receive a report from the chief inspector of marine accidents very soon. We will then consider what further action needs to be taken.

Night Blindness

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider making it a condition for the grant of a motor vehicle licence that the applicant should be subject to a test for night blindness.

Mr. Norris: Complete night blindness is a very rare condition, and such a general test would not be appropriate. It is notifiable under the Road Traffic Act 1988 and is normally a bar to driving. However, special tests are used to see whether a person so affected is capable of adequate vision driving at night using vehicle headlights. Night blindness is not to be confused with night myopia which is more common and not notifiable as it is normally overcome by vehicle headlights and street lighting.

Nitric Acid

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 17 October, Official Report, columns 94–95, if he is aware of any planned import of radioactive nitric acid by sea from the United States of America.

Mr. Norris: I understand that the United States subsidiary of British Nuclear Fuels plc has recently agreed a contract with the United States Department of Energy to recycle radioactive nitric acid from the Westinghouse Hanford site in Washington state. The acid will be carried in purpose-built containers which comply with all national and international regulations.

Channel Tunnel Link

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for not including a connection between the channel tunnel railway and crossrail in the tender documents recently issued to the four bidding consortia.

Mr. Watts: It will be for the private sector in taking forward the two railways to decide whether they want a connection and, if they do, to seek the necessary powers and to pay for it.

Traffic Regulation Orders

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the temporary traffic regulation orders for which he has authorised an extension under section 15(5) of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 as amended by the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Act 1991, stating in each case (a) the name of the authority making the order, (b) the public rights of way stopped up by the order, (c) the duration of the extension and (d) why he granted the extension.

Mr. Norris: This information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Railtrack (Safety Objectives)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will set safety objectives for Railtrack in respect of level crossings.

Mr. Watts: This is a matter for Railtrack who have undertaken to include a safety objective for level crossings in the railway group safety plan for 1995–96.

Personal Injury Accidents

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, columns 119—20, if he will publish the latest figures for personal injury accidents involving minibuses and motor caravans by police area from 1990 to 1993.

Mr. Norris: The required information is shown in the table.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he plans to consider objections to the under-sea part of the proposed Scotland to Northern Ireland interconnector.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 15 July 1994]: The Department received an application for consent under section 34 of the Coast Protection Act 1949 to the laying of an under-sea power cable from Ayrshire to Island Magee. Section 34 is only concerned with obstruction or danger to navigation. The application was advertised. No objections were received. A consent solely for the purposes of section 34 was issued on 22 February 1994.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Heseltine: (a) Seventeen (b) None (c) None. Some agencies directly accountable to the Department also employ full or part-time press officers.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times during the 1993–94 Session information requested in parliamentary questions has been refused on the ground of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department has refused information requested in parliamentary questions on the grounds of commercial confidentiality on 50 occasions during the 1993–94 Session.

Lord Archer

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) who decided that his Department should make a public statement on 7 July that Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare was the subject of an inquiry into alleged insider dealing;

(2) what were the reasons for his Department's statement on 7 July that Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare was the subject of an inquiry into alleged insider dealing.

Mr. Heseltine: On 8 February 1994 I appointed two inspectors under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 to investigate possible insider dealing in relation to an agreed bid made by MAI plc for Anglia Television Group plc. On 7 July 1994 I was informed that The Times newspaper had informed my Department that it intended to publish the existence of the investigation and that Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare was concerned with the investigation. On the same day I was also informed that MAI plc had confirmed the existence of the investigation.

I took the decision to issue a statement in the light of these circumstances.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the (a) budgeted and (b) total cost of the inquiry into the allegations of insider trading involving Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare.

Mr. Heseltine: It is not my Department's practice to disclose details of individuals from whom legal advice is obtained. Both the advice and its source is regarded as confidential.

Aluminium Industry

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has made to the European Commission to investigate state aids to the aluminium producers Inespal of Spain and Pechiney of France; and what response he has received.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has drawn these cases to the Commission's attention. The Commission has investigated the claims, but has so far found no evidence to substantiate them. We will continue to monitor the situation carefully.

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has made to the EFTA surveillance authority to investigate state aids to the aluminium producer Austria Metal; and what response he has received.

Mr. Eggar: Following representations from my Department, the Commission agreed to draw this case to the attention of the EFTA surveillance authority. When we have a response I will write to inform my right hon. Friend of the result.

Konver Funding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether EU Konver funding will be available for the Doncaster area; and how this money will be administered and distributed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's view, conveyed to the European Commission on 1 August as it requested, is that the whole of South Yorkshire, including Doncaster, should be eligible for the renewed programme of Konver grants. The Commission's decision was due on 1 October.

Before any grants can be approved, the eligible areas have to be settled, a United Kingdom operational programme document has to be sent to the Commission and approved by it, and applications examined against the terms of the document. Administrative details will be settled in good time.

Post Office

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to support the recommendations of the Institute of Directors for full privatisation of the Post Office with no protected monopoly or uniform price guarantee.

Mr. Eggar: No

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been spent by his Department on preparations for the privatisation of the Post Office since he announced his review of its ownership and structure in the House in July 1992.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Government announced their intention to privatise Parcelforce on 15 July 1992 and announced the review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office on 29 July 1992. From those dates to 24 October 1994 a total of £1,613,002·28 has been spent on consultancy advice.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been spent by the Post Office on making the case for its own privatisation since he announced his review of its ownership and structure in the House in July 1992.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: This is an operational matter for the Post Office.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines he has issued to the Post Office on expenditure incurred by it arguing for its own privatisation.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: No guidelines have been issued.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will instruct the Post Office board, with effect from the announcement of his review of the structure and ownership of the Post Office in July 1992, to embargo any moves of senior personnel from Post Office Counters to Royal Mail or Parcelforce if his plans go ahead.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: No.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for the operation of the Post Office Investigation Department if he privatises Royal Mail but keeps Post Office Counters in the public sector.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Green Paper makes it clear that the future of activities which are not part of Post Office Counters, Royal Mail or Parcelforce will depend on the decisions reached overall.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account he has taken of a copy of a report by London Economics entitled "The Future of Postal Services - a critique of the Government's Green Paper", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: We have read the London Economics report with considerable interest. In the Government's view it has not fully dealt with the difficulties in its proposals, but it is a worthwhile contribution to the debate.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account he has taken of a MORI poll conducted in August on the views of the Post Office managers on privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: We have taken full account of all considered responses to the Green Paper.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many individual submissions he received from sub-postmasters on his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services"; and what account he has taken of an opinion poll conducted by MORI in August on the views of sub-postmasters about privatisation.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: We have received very few responses from individual sub-postmasters. We are aware of the opinion poll referred to.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to extend VAT to (a) contract parcels traffic undertaken by the Post Office and (b) Royal Mail letter and packet traffic.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Green Paper "The Future of Postal Services" made clear that the universal letter and parcels services, which under any option Royal Mail and Parcelforce will continue to provide, will remain exempt from VAT. It also made clear that the Government would be considering, in the light of EC law, the imposition of VAT on non-obligatory services, including contract parcels, provided by Royal Mail and Parcelforce. No decision has been taken.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has quantified the estimated value of the new commercial freedoms to be made available to Post Office Counters, outlined in his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services"; and whether this value will exceed the estimated value of the business lost by Post Office Counters over the next five years as Government Departments and the Royal Mail move business away from them.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: No. Any projections about increases in volume from new business, or increases or decreases in existing business, are an operational matter for Post Office Counters.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what was the response of the Mail Users National Council to his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services", and when he last met its representatives;

(2) what was the response of the Post Office Users National Council to his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services"; and when he last met its representatives;

(3) what was the response of the Periodical Publishers Association to his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services"; and when he last met its representatives;

(4) what was the response of the Direct Marketing Association to his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services"; and when he last met its representatives;

(5) what was the response of Protecting Postal services to his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services"; and when he last met its representatives.

Mr. Eggar [holding answers 24 October 1994]: It is for respondents to make public their views if they choose to do so. I have met none of the organisations mentioned. My hon. Friend The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Industry and Energy met representatives of the Post Office Users National Council on 8 September and of the Protecting Postal Services on 12 September.

Offshore Licensing

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the organisations his Department has consulted concerning the 16th round of offshore licensing, giving dates of any meetings with environmental organisations.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Listed are the organisations which my Department has consulted over the 16th round. Those environmental organisations which officials have met are indicated on the list.

In addition, officials are arranging a joint meeting later this month with all other environmental groups who have requested a meeting or have provided substantive comments on the 16th round.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on how his Department applies the Government's commitment to the precautionary principle contained in "Sustainable Development; The United Kingdom Strategy", paragraph 3.12 to licensing oil exploration, especially in environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 24 October 1994]: A central concern for United Kingdom policy with regard to sustainable development, will be to reconcile the demand for energy with the need to reduce the impact of its exploitation, generation and use on the environment. However, these concerns are not incompatible with the continued need for hydrocarbon exploration around the United Kingdom coast. The Government will apply the precautionary principle where there is a threat of serious or irreversible damage to the environment. There is no evidence to suggest that oil and gas exploration activity poses such a threat.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the environmental organisations which have made representations to him either individually or in consortia, concerning the 16th round of offshore licensing; which organisations urged a complete suspension of the round; and which urged suspension in specific areas or blocks.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current regulations governing the repayment by the Child Support Agency to absent parents of any overpayment made by absent parents in respect of child support maintenance.

Mr. Burt: There are no regulations that permit the Child Support Agency to repay to absent parents any overpaid maintenance. Regulation 10 of the Child Support (Arrears, Interest and Adjustment of Maintenance Assessments) Regulations 1992 does, however, provide that a child support officer may adjust the current maintenance assessment where it has retrospective effect or where there has been an underpayment or overpayment of maintenance.

"New Outlook"

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many copies of "New Outlook" were distributed direct to claimants; and what measures were taken to ensure that "New Outlook" was not sent to claimants who could not be eligible for the new child allowance;

(2) what was the total cost of preparing, printing and distributing "New Outlook".

Mr. Burt: "New Outlook", a newspaper-style compilation of information on in-work benefits and Government training schemes, was distributed to lone parents on income support with a youngest child aged nine years or over — total of 260,702 families.

"New Outlook" contained information on a wide range of help likely to be of interest to lone parents who might be thinking of returning to work. It was not intended solely to publicise the new help with childcare charges.

The total cost of preparing, printing and distributing "New Outlook" was £74,009·30 inclusive of VAT.

Pensions

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish the text of the letter currently being sent to pensioners advocating the payment of pensions through bank accounts rather than at post offices.

Mr. Arbuthnot: There is currently no letter going from this Department to retirement pensioners advocating the payment of pensions through bank accounts rather than at the post office.

People approaching retirement age are sent a pack containing a claim form covering all payment methods and leaflet AC1 explaining payment to an account, including Girobank and National Savings accounts at post offices. Copies of the pension claim form and this leaflet are available in the Library.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether it is Government policy to seek by voluntary means a reduction in the proportion of pensions paid through post offices.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Our policy is to offer pensioners the choice of receiving their benefit over a post office counter or having it paid directly into a bank or building society account, including Girobank and national savings accounts at post offices.

Incapacity Benefit

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the numbers of people who will claim incapacity benefit in 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Hague: We forecast that around 1·1 million new claims' to incapacity benefit will be made in each of the years 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Source: forecast based upon the projection of past trends in the data, rounded to the nearest 100,000.

Notes:

A "new claim" means a claim submitted at the beginning of a spell of incapacity for work. If a person has several separate spells of incapacity for work during the year, each spell is included as a new claim. The figure includes new claims which will not result in a payment of benefit.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total spending on housing benefit to the private sector in (a) 1993–94 and (b) to date in the current year; and what was the average amount per week of housing benefit paid in (i) the private sector, (ii) the council sector and (iii) the housing association sector.

Mr. Roger Evans: The provisional total for housing benefit paid to private tenants in 1993–94 is £3,817 million; the forecast for 1994–95 is £4,320 million.

The average weekly housing benefit at the end of May 1993 was

council tenants	28·94
housing association tenants	35·75
other private tenants	46·80

Disability Allowances

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support disability premium since April 1993 have had this premium withdrawn following a decision that they are capable of work; how many of these appealed; and in how many of these appeals the claimants were successful.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support in each region also receive the disability premium; and how many receive the disability premium by reason only of their incapacity to work.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table:

Region	Total number on IS in receipt of the disability premium	Numbers in receipt of the disability premium because of incapacity[1]
North Eastern	84,000	47,000
London North	84,000	52,000
South Western	31,000	18,000
Midlands	82,000	43,000
North Western	103,000	61,000
London South	67,000	43,000
Wales	44,000	28,000
Scotland	73,000	48,000
Total	568,000	340,000

[1] over twenty eight weeks incapacitated for work, and people who receive invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance. People who qualify because they are registered blind or are provided with an invalid carriage are also included. The figure does not include those who qualify because of receipt of disability living allowance, attendance allowance, or disability working allowance.

Adjudication Rules

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make changes to the Social Security (Adjudication) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1994 in response to the suggestion relating to housing costs mentioned by the chief adjudication officer at paragraph 2.7 of his annual report for 1993–94.

Mr. Roger Evans: Amendments to the social security adjudication regulations were laid yesterday which will come into force on 14 November. These will enable the adjudication officer to adjudicate on those claims where they have insufficient information to decide the amount which may be allowed for items of housing costs. In those cases only those items of housing costs, if any, which can be determined immediately will be included in the applicable amount. Once sufficient information is available to enable other housing costs to be determined, the initial decision will be reviewed. The amendment makes similar provision for cases where it appears that the severe disability premium may be appropriate, but the AO needs additional information before deciding whether this premium is applicable.

Incapacity Assessment Panel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many members of the panel on assessment of incapacity have refused to have their names published; and on what grounds.

Mr. Hague: All those who participated as panel members were asked for their agreement to have their names published within the report, "The Medical Assessment for Incapacity Benefit".

Ten members responded in the negative.

Panel members had not been asked to give grounds for refusal and none was provided.

War Pensions

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many war pensions are being paid to former service personnel in respect of asbestos-related conditions;

(2) how many war pensions have been awarded to former service personnel since 1964 in respect of asbestos-related conditions;

(3) how many service personnel have received war pensions because of deafness since 1964.

Mr. Hague: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Roger Evans: The number of press officers currently employed by this Department is set out in the table:

	Number
The Department's headquarters in London	10
Seconded HQ press officer to the charity Motability	1
The Child Support Agency	2
The Contributions Agency	1

This Department does not have press officers based in the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of staff currently employed by the Employment Department Group is 58,457·5. There are no standard regions in the Department. The Employment Department Group consists of four separate organisations: Health and Safety Executive, Employment Service, Employment Department and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service. Each organisation has a separate regional structure. However, the Treasury produces staffing information for standard economic planning regions, and the latest Treasury figures are as follows:

Yorks and Humber	7,539	12·9

Mr. Oppenheim: The Employment Department Group does not commission public opinion surveys. Full details of all research commissioned by the group are published in our annual reports on research. I would be happy to provide the hon. Member with reports for the relevant period if he so wished.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed by the TECs.

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are private companies and as such are not required to provide information on the number of staff they employ.

Pregnant Workers Directive

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the deadline for incorporating into United Kingdom law the provisions of the EU's pregnant workers directive.

Miss Widdecombe: The date is 19 October 1994.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to table regulations implementing the health and safety provisions of the pregnant workers directive.

Miss Widdecombe: Draft proposals for regulations to implement the health and safety provisions of the pregnant workers directive were submitted by the Health and Safety Commission on 7 October 1994. I am currently considering these proposals with the aim of tabling regulations as soon as possible.

Career Development Loans

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications for loans under the career development scheme have been made in 1994–95 for each region and for Great Britain as a whole and how many have been rejected; how many women have been awarded loans; how many training for work participants have been awarded loans endorsed by their training and enterprise council or local enterprise company; what have been the successful course completion rates in each region; how much has been awarded in total for each region and how much has been recovered; and if he will make a statement.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people (a) are currently on a course which has been supported by a career development loan, (b) are repaying a career development loan, (c) have had recovery action taken against them because they have defaulted on the loan and (d) have had to defer repayments of their career development loan because of hardship for each region and for Great Britain as a whole; what is the average amount of loan taken out; an if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: Information by region on the number of people currently in training supported by a career development loan and the number of people currently repaying a loan is shown in the following table.

Details of the number of people who have had recovery action taken against them because they defaulted on the loan are not available. No information is held on the number of trainees who have had to defer repayment on loans due to hardship.

Woodlee Rehabilitation Centre

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to use the Woodlee rehabilitation centre, Egham, for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled people.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Sir John Hannam, dated 25 October 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the future use of the Woodlee Rehabilitation Centre, Egham for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled people.

In keeping with the policy of delivering rehabilitation services through local providers announced in 1991 by Michael Howard, the then Secretary of State for Employment, the Woodlee Centre closed its rehabilitation services in 1992. The premises have since been used, pending their sale, to accommodate other services.

The premises were placed on the open market in August and a total of eight bids were received. I have authorised acceptance of the highest bid representing the best return to the taxpayer. That bidder is a private educational establishment and will not be using the premises for the rehabilitation of disabled people.

I hope this is helpful.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost of the redevelopment of the Woodlee rehabilitation centre, Egham.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Sir John Hannam, dated 25 October 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the cost of the redevelopment of Woodlee Rehabilitation Centre, Egham.

The Employment Service has not had any plans to redevelop the Woodlee site since its closure as a rehabilitation centre in 1992. It was recently placed for sale on the open market and on 17 October I agreed acceptance of an offer from a private educational establishment.

I hope this is helpful.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Miss Widdecombe: There are currently 13 press officers employed by the Department based in London, none in the House, and one in Sheffield.

Employment Service Agency Agreement

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress the Employment Service has made in meeting the targets outlined in the 1994–95 agency agreement; and if he will list for each quarter (a) the total unemployed job placings and variance from targets, (b) the long-term unemployed job placings and variance from targets, (c) job placings of people with disabilities and variance from target, (d) inner-city job placings and variance from target, (e) the number of claims not pursued following initial contact and variance from target, (f) the number of claimants moved from unemployment benefit to another benefit and variance from target, (g) the number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators and variance from target, (h) the number of submissions to adjudication where there is an arguable case with supporting information to show that the claimant is not available for, actively seeking or willing to accept work and variance from target; (i) the number of positive outcomes for unemployed claimants invited to a 12 month advisory interview and variance from target and (j) the number of positive outcomes for unemployed claimants invited to a 24-month advisory interview and variance from target.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Service is making progress against its target for 1994–95, meeting or exceeding almost all at the mid-year stage. It placed 992,100 unemployed people into jobs in the first two quarters, against an annual target of 1·7 million. This represents 133,100 more placings than at the same stage last year. Performance to date is set out in the following table. There is no target for the number of claimants moved from unemployment benefit to another benefit.

Employment Service Performance Against Target
April—September 1994

Annual performance targets	Quarter 1	Quarter 2	Cumulative	Target levels
Total placings of unemployed people in jobs	482,500	509,600	992,100	1,700,000
Long-term claimants placed into jobs as a percentage of total unemployed placings	29·5 per cent.	28·9 per cent.	29·2 per cent.	29·5 per cent.
(c) People with disabilities placed into jobs as a percentage of total unemployed placings	3·5 per cent.	3·6 per cent.	3·6 per cent.	3·3 per cent.

Sickness Benefit

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of claimants who have moved directly from the unemployment register to receipt of sickness benefit in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. James Wallace, dated 25 October 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of claimants who have moved directly from the unemployed register to claim sickness benefit in the last 12 months.

Unfortunately, the information you have requested is not available. At present the computer system used by the Employment Service to process benefit claims does not record details of the reasons for claim closure.

As from 2 December, enhancement of the system will enable us to provide this information, although not I am afraid retrospectively.

I hope this is helpful.

WALES

Tourism

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) of 17 October, column 12, what is the statistical basis for (a) numbers of tourist visits to Wales and (b) the amount of money spent in Wales by tourists; and how the figures distinguish between tourist and business visits and expenditure.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on domestic—that is, United Kingdom—tourists comes from the United Kingdom tourist survey commissioned jointly by the Wales, Scotland, England and Northern Ireland tourist boards. It is based on interviews with United Kingdom residents and measures tourism trips of one night or more for any purpose.

Information on overseas visitors comes from an international passenger survey conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on behalf of the Central Statistical Office.

Survey totals estimated 7·7 million trips by United Kingdom residents to Wales and a spend of £945 million comprising £745 million on holidays, accounting for 70 per cent. of trips, with business spend at £90 million and (9 per cent. of trips)—the balance being for other purposes. Estimates of 670,000 overseas visitors with a spend of £132 million do not identify business travel.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what percentage of chief executives of national health service trusts in each of the last four years have been paid on a performance-related pay basis.

Mr. Richards: This information is not held centrally. NHS trusts have the freedom to set local terms and conditions of service.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the volumes of low-level radioactive waste to be committed to the Cilgwyn quarry waste disposal site for burial; and what quality control checks exist for nuclear waste disposal in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Only very small amounts of radioactive waste are disposed of at the Cilgwyn site and under individual authorisation from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. No waste from the nuclear industry are involved. Because of his appellate role under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, my right hon. Friend cannot become involved in the specific detail of authorisation.

One of the options explored in the recent Government consultation document "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy - Preliminary Conclusions", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, is that of encouraging waste producers to make greater use of the controlled burial of radioactive waste at suitable landfill sites. No specific sites have been identified. The views of respondents concerning the option will be carefully considered within the consultation process.

Households

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of households, at the latest available date, was economically inactive in each of the boroughs at district council areas in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested in respect of district council areas can be obtained from the 1991 census of population data on the Nomis database in the House of Commons Library.

Sheep and Beef Production

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the European Commission concerning the interpretation of regulations governing the operation and allocation of quotas for sheep and beef production.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food normally represents the United Kingdom in negotiations with the European Commission. Several amendments to the regulations have already been negotiated which will bring welcome flexibilities in the way livestock quotas are administered.

Badgers

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many licences have been granted by the Countryside Council for Wales for interference with badger setts following the Badger Act 1991, now the Protection of Badgers Act 1992; and for which purposes listed in section 10 of the 1992 Act such licences were issued.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am advised by the Countryside Council for Wales that 82 such licences have been issued for the purposes of conservation, development and the investigation of offences.

Baglan Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money is estimated to be spent on the Baglan hospital in the current financial year; and how much in 1995–96.

Mr. Richards: It is too early in the planning of the proposed hospital to estimate spending profiles.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when it is now expected that a restart will be made on the work of constructing the Baglan hospital; in what stages; and on what dates it is now expected to go out to tender on the initial contracts.

Mr. Richards: These are matters for the West Glamorgan health authority, which has responsibility for progressing the scheme.

M4 (Traffic Volume)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of traffic volumes of the M4 from (a) New House roundabout to the Coldra, (b) the Coldra to St Julians, (c) Malpas to Tredegar Park and (d) Tredegar Park to Tonguryniais in 1995, 2000, 2005, 2010, 2015 and 2020.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the following table:

Predicted M4 traffic flows

[2] On the Newhouse to Magor section, predicted flows for years 2000 and beyond reflect the opening of the second Severn crossing scheme in 1996.

[3] Figures take no account of the proposed M4 relief road between Magor and Castleton.

Hill Farms

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of hill farm incomes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Farm incomes for 1992–93 are contained in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom", published in March 1994. Estimates of hill farm incomes for 1993–94 together with forecast for 1994–95 are due to be published as part of the autumn hill review on 29 November. Final figures for 1993–94 are not yet available but on the basis of data currently analysed incomes are expected to have risen compared to 1992–93.

Sea Wall Works

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Wales region of the National Rivers Authority concerning the funding arrangements and expected start date of work on the raising of the sea wall between Newport and Cardiff.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has been liaising for some time with the Welsh region of the NRA about funding arrangements and a start of work on raising of the sea wall between Newport and Cardiff.

Agreement in principle was given on 18 October to proposals recently submitted to the Department for works to this length of sea wall.

Drugs Advice Centres

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the South, Mid and West Glamorgan health authorities concerning the setting up of street-based drop-in drug prevention advice centre.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Hospital Patients

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has in relation to amending the guidelines to the rights of health authorities and the rights of patients and their spouses or other carers in relation to (a) bed blocking and (b) transfer to private nursing or residential care homes.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office and the Department of Health have consulted widely on guidance which reaffirms health authorities' responsibilities for meeting the continuing health care needs of patients, as set out in the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. The outcome of this consultation will be known shortly.

Health Service (Complaints)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to issue the guidelines on new unified complaints procedure for the NHS patients in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The unified complaints procedure is one of the recommendations of the Wilson report on NHS complaints procedures, "Being Heard", which are being considered by the Government in the light of consultation responses received.

Rail Freight Garage Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with South Glamorgan and Gwent county councils, the relevant city or borough councils and British Rail in relation to the proposed Rail Freight European garage centre for south Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am keen to see more freight transported by rail where practicable. The Welsh Development Agency, in conjunction with local authorities and others, is considering the commercial options for a European freight terminal in south Wales. I look forward to receiving proposals soon.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the grant-maintained status schools had (a) deficits, (b) surpluses and (c) neither on the final date of accounts before transferring into grant-maintained status; and if he will list the subsequent transactions between the relevant schools and local authorities with respect to making the appropriate refunding arrangements.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 October 1994]: The financial position of the 16 grant-maintained schools in Wales on acquiring grant-maintained status was as follows:

(a) Four schools had overspent their local management of schools allocation;

(b) Nine schools were in credit; and

(c) Three schools had neither a deficit nor a surplus.

Before the Education (Grant-maintained Schools) (Finance) (Wales) Regulations 1994 came into force on 1 April this year, it was left to local education authorities and schools to resolve any differences. Under the regulations, however, any deficit incurred or surplus accrued by a school while under any LEA control can be taken into account in calculating its annual maintenance grant for its first year as a grant-maintained school. This has applied in the case of only one school; the deficit is being repaid.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools there were in each local authority in Wales by 1 October; how many in each case had held ballots under section 61 of the Education Act 1988; how many ballots in each case resulted in votes in favour of seeking grant-maintained status; and how many ballots in each case resulted in votes against seeking grant-maintained status.

Mr. Richards: The number of LEA-maintained and grant-maintained primary and secondary schools in Wales as at 1 April 1994, the latest date for which details are available, is as follows:

	Primary	Secondary
Clwyd	245	32
Dyfed	313	31
Gwent	213	33
Gwynedd	191	23
Mid Glamorgan	305	42
Powys	108	13
South Glamorgan	159	26
West Glamorgan	164	27

Of these, 10 primary and 18[*] secondary schools have held ballots on whether they should apply for grant-maintained status under section 61 of the Education Reform Act 1988. In six primary and 12 secondary schools, the vote was in favour; in four primary and seven secondary schools the outcome of the ballot was against.

[*] one secondary school balloted twice.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Court of Justice

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many judges there are in the European Court of Justice from each member nation of the European Union; and how many of them were judges in their own country before their appointment to the European Court.

Mr. David Davis: The European Court of Justice consists of 13 judges, one from each member state and a 13th, appointed on rotation, who is currently from Italy. Four of the judges were judges in their own member state before their appointment to the European Court of Justice. All the judges more than meet the treaty requirement to "possess the qualifications required for appointment to the highest judicial offices in their respective countries or ... are jurisconsults of recognised competence".

North Korea

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made over the scrutiny of North Korea's nuclear capacity.

Mr. David Davis: On 21 October 1994 the United States and North Korea signed an agreement on nuclear matters in Geneva. Under this, North Korea has agreed to freeze and eventually dismantle its graphite-moderated reactors and related facilities. It has also agreed to remain a party to the non-proliferation treaty and will allow implementation of its safeguards agreement under the treaty. We hope that this will lead to a resolution of the nuclear problem in North Korea. We now look to the North Koreans to demonstrate their willingness to comply with this agreement. The United Kingdom has supported United States efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement and we welcome the agreement.

Taiwan

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of relations with Taiwan.

Mr. Goodlad: Although the United Kingdom has no diplomatic relations with Taiwan, we attach great importance to our commercial, cultural and educational links. United Kingdom exports for the period January–August 1994 were £448 million, an increase of 13 per cent. compared with the same period in 1993. The British trade and cultural office in Taipei is being reinforced with additional staff to develop these links.

Land Mines

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy regarding the question of the marking and mapping of all minefields.

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom strictly adheres to the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention and its protocols, which govern the use of mines, including the mapping and marking of minefields.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated proportion of the annual casualties world-wide caused by anti-personnel mines used (a) in accordance with protocol II of the 1980 United Nations inhumane weapons convention and (b) in breach of that protocol.

Mr. David Davis: Reliable estimates of the casualty rates world-wide caused by anti-personnel land mines are not available.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest estimate of the annual casualty rate world-wide resulting from the use of anti-personnel mines of all types.

Mr. David Davis: Reliable estimates of the casualty rates world-wide caused by anti-personnel land mines are not available.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what value is placed on the term excessive as used in protocol II of the United Nations inhumane weapons convention in respect of the relationship between loss of civilian life and military advantage.

Mr. David Davis: Article 3, paragraph 3, of protocol II of the said convention prohibits the use of land mines or booby-traps which may be expected to cause incidental civilian losses which would be excessive in relation to the concrete and direct military advantage anticipated. Whether any such losses might be considered excessive must depend on the individual circumstances of given cases.

Azerbaijan

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he assesses to be the cause of instability in Azerbaijan and the likely repercussions on the concessions recently granted to British Petroleum and others offshore in the Caspian sea.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the fact that recent difficulties in Azerbaijan were resolved with minimal bloodshed, and stability has returned. There has been no effect on the production sharing agreement signed on 20 September between the state oil company of Azerbaijan and a consortium of western oil companies.

British Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to monitor the efficiency and effectiveness of the British Council

Mr. Baldry: The council has in place a range of performance measures and indicators, agreed with the FCO, through which their efficiency and effectiveness is monitored. We also receive regular reports on council activities from our diplomatic missions overseas.

Gibraltar

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was his response to the recent remarks of the Chief Minister of Gibraltar about the development of financial services and the appropriate regulatory regime.

Mr. David Davis: We support the development of financial services in Gibraltar supervised to a standard consistent with EC obligations and legislation and supervisory practice within the United Kingdom.

We welcome the passage through the Gibraltar House of Assembly in May of amendments to the Financial Services Commission Ordinance which introduce a supervisory regime designed to achieve these ends.

OECD

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom contribution towards the cost of running the OECD in cash and as a percentage of the whole for each year since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Members' contributions are based on GDP, using an average of their GDP for the previous three years. The United Kingdom's contributions to the OECD general expenditure budget are as follows:

United Kingdom contribution Year	(£'s 000)	Percentage of OECD budget
1982	2,580	6·73
1983	2,633	7·25
1984	3,304	7·67
1985	3,702	7·48
1986	4,298	7·14
1987	4,118	6·93
1988	3,710	6·48
1989	4,319	6·23
1990	4,455	6·19
1991	5,049	6·27
1992	6,306	6·33
1993	6,427	6·25

The United Kingdom is paid in French francs and therefore subject to exchange rate fluctuations. The figures are calculated using the average exchange rate for the relevant year.

The corresponding figures for 1979–1981 could not be obtained except at a disproportionate cost.

Caspian Sea

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the present participants in oil and gas exploration licences recently granted to British Petroleum and others in the Caspian sea area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: JKX are understood to hold an exploration licence for a block in the Caspian Sea offshore Daghestan. Amoco, BP/Statoil, Delta, Lukoil, McDermott, Nimir, Pennzoil, Ramco, TPAO and UNOCAL are signatories to a production sharing contract offshore Azerbaijan. AGIP, BP/Statoil, British Gas, Mobil, Shell, Statoil and Total are signatories to an exploration contract offshore Kazakhstan.

Czech Republic

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the Government of the Czech Republic to return the property in Usti Nad-Labem that was confiscated from Karel and Jitka Lorenc of Plymouth by the former communist regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to intervene with the Czech authorities. The restitution of property in the Czech republic confiscated by the former communist regime is a matter for Czech law; a number of laws on this subject have been passed since 1990. There have been no new developments since my letter of 20 September to the hon. Member, in which I advised that Mr. and Mrs. Lorenc should seek expert advice from a Czech lawyer on how best to pursue their case.

Iraq

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances Her Majesty's Government would authorise British forces to carry out a pre-emptive attack on Iraqi forces on Iraqi territory; and in what circumstances Her Majesty's Government would support military forces of any other country carrying out such pre-emptive military action.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any decision relating to the use of force would depend on the circumstances at the time.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for reports, submitted by Rolf Ekeus, the head of the UN Special Commission for Iraq to the UN, to be placed in the Library; what are the main conclusions of the reports submitted by Mr. Ekeus, to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The report of Ambassador Ekeus on the status of Iraqi compliance with section C of Security Council Resolution 687, UN document S/1994/1138, and the parallel IAEA report, S/1994/1151, have been placed in the Library of the House. Conclusions can be found in paragraphs 37–39, and 49 respectively.

These are thorough, comprehensive and well-balanced reports which do credit to the professionalism of the UN special commission, UNSCOM, and the IAEA in their task of uncovering Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programme, establishing current capabilities and setting up a monitoring and verification regime to ensure that no such weapons can be regenerated in the future.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Goodlad: There are nine full-time press officers employed in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, three in the Overseas Development Administration and none based permanently in the House. Overseas, each of our embassies or high commissions has at least one officer whose work is wholly or partly press-related.

Armenia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish a British overseas post in Armenia; if he will list those countries which are (a) officially represented in Armenia and (b) intend to be officially represented in Armenia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are at present no plans to establish a resident British mission in Yerevan. The pattern of our overseas representation is kept under review. HM ambassador in Moscow is accredited to Armenia. He and his staff visit Yerevan regularly.

We understand that Albania, Canada, China, France, Germany, Greece, Iran, Japan, Kazakhstan, Russia, and the USA are represented in Yerevan. We have no information on the intentions of any other countries.

Rwanda

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to assist with the funding and deployment of human rights monitors to encourage the return of refugees to Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: We have contributed £250,000 to the UN monitors fund and have also provided four four-wheel drive vehicles for the use of monitors in Rwanda. The EU is considering sending 50 monitors in support of UN activity. This is being pursued by the Commission.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom is providing to the Government of Rwanda in re-establishing and training the judiciary.

Mr. Baldry: Together with our EU partners we are considering what further assistance we can offer to Rwanda from EU funds. This might include help to restore their legal system, which we hope will also be a priority for the UN.

International Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution was committed by Her Majesty's Government to the International Atomic Energy Agency's annual budget at the IAEA's 38th general conference; what is the total IAEA budget; and how this is planned to be spent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The IAEA 38th general conference approved a regular budget for 1995 of US $211·5 million of which US $202·7 million would be met by member states. This represents zero growth in real terms. The United's Kingdom's contribution was set at 5·277 per cent.

The regular budget provides for the costs of running the agency. It also provides the costs of the agency's programmes on nuclear energy and safety, on research and isotopes, and on safeguards. The regular budget has been subject to zero real growth since 1983.

Australia

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what residual constitutional powers and duties reside with (a) the United Kingdom Government and (b) the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in respect of the Australian states and for which the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia has no jurisdiction.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Australia Act 1986, and parallel legislation enacted in Australia, removed the remaining constitutional links between the United Kingdom and the Australian states, achieving complete legislative independence for Australia from the United Kingdom.

DEFENCE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Freeman: At 1 July 1994, the Ministry of Defence employed some 120,000 full-time equivalent civil servants, excluding casual staff and locally employed civilians overseas. Of this number, 114,000 were employed in the United Kingdom: the table below gives the number and percentage employed in each economic planning region.

Economic planning region	Number of MOD civilians	Percentage of UK total
South East	45,837·5	40·2
East Anglia	2,738·5	2·4
South West	24,771·0	21·7
West Midlands	8,153·5	7·2
East Midlands	3,737·0	3·3
Yorkshire and Humberside	4,465·5	3·9
North West	2,641·5	2·3
Northern	2,620·0	2·3
Wales	4,864·0	4·3
Scotland	11,237·5	9·8
Northern Ireland	2,941·0	2·6
Total United Kingdom	114,007	100

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the West Midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. None of my Department's non-departmental public bodies are, however, based in either of these regions.

Indonesia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit by Field Marshall Sir Peter Inge to Indonesia in early October; and what military support commitments he made to the Indonesian President.

Mr. Soames: Field Marshal Sir Peter Inge's visit to Indonesia in October formed part of a programme of calls on his counterparts in the region. As is usual, details of his discussions are confidential.

Gulf War (Claims)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to establish an investigation into the claims by former Territorial Army member Kathryn Lamb, former RAF member Richard Turnbull, former Royal Artillery man Ian Dowden and former Eleventh armoured workshopman Robert Lake that they have suffered from physical ailments induced by participation in Operation Granby in the Gulf in 1990–91

Mr. Soames: These claims are already being investigated. They are among a number of potential claims for compensation notified to my Department. Arrangements have been agreed with their solicitors to invite all potential claimants to come forward for a medical assessment by a service consultant.

Service Meals

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meals a day each service man in (a) the Royal Marines and (b) the Army is allowed.

Mr. Soames: Service personnel in both the Royal Marines and the Army are provided with three meals per day. Where they are employed on extra duties an additional meal, such as supper, is provided.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many calories the Army Catering Corps is expected to provide each soldier with on a daily basis for the sum set as a food allowance; and how many calories are actually provided on average.

Mr. Soames: Ration scales vary according to location. The home ration scale used in all United Kingdom establishments is designed to provide 2,900 kilo-calories nett—that is, after loss through preparation and cooking. The general overseas ration scale used in overseas bases includes an arduous duty allowance, to allow for climate and provides 3,400 kilo-calories nett. In field conditions, where personnel are fed from operational ration packs, 3,800 kilo-calories are provided.

It is not possible to calculate how many calories are actually provided. Most establishments offer a "self-serve" system of service and by their choice of food service personnel may marginally increase or decrease their actual calorific intake.

Asbestos (Compensation)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have received compensation for asbestos-related conditions since 1987.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MoD civilian employees have been awarded compensation for asbestos-related conditions since 1964.

Mr. Soames: Statistics have been maintained only since 1 April 1985, since when there have been 1,340 payments of compensation to civilian employees of my Department for asbestos-related conditions.

Deafness (Compensation)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian MoD employees have received compensation following deafness claims since 1964.

Mr. Soames: Statistics have been maintained only since 1 April 1985, since when there have been 4,617 payments of compensation to civilian employees of my Department for deafness.

Nuclear-related Materials

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian MoD employees have received ex gratia payments due to exposure to nuclear-related materials since 1964.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have received ex gratia payments due to exposure to nuclear-related materials since 1964.

Mr. Soames: None.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Freeman: At present, the number of service personnel and civilians employed in complemented press and public relations posts in London is 39. A further 117 are employed in districts and commands at home and overseas. No staff are employed in the House.

NSA Menwith Hill

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police are employed at NSA Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Soames: It is not our policy to comment on specific security arrangements.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisation employs the chief of station at Menwith Hill station; and what is its nationality.

Mr. Soames: The chief of station at Menwith Hill is employed by the national security agency of the United States.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) breaches of security, (b) arrests and (c) successful prosecutions there have been at Menwith Hill station in the last year to date.

Mr. Soames: Between 1 January and 20 October 1994 the figures are as follows:

Breaches	520
Arrests	27
Successful prosecutions	4

The figure for breaches relates to the number of incursions on MOD land. None of the reported incidents led to any entry into secure areas within the Menwith Hill station site.

Mr. Maddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of the two new radomes, support buildings, roads and security fencing at Menwith Hill station; and how this cost is being met.

Mr. Soames: The cost of the two new radomes and support structures has been borne by the United States Government. The total cost is a matter for the United States authorities.

HMS Forest Moor

Mr. Madden : To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of the new security system at HMS Forest Moor.

Mr. Soames: It is not our policy to comment on specific security arrangements.

NSA Molesworth

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times polychlorinated biphenyls have been found in concentrations exceeding legal limits in the past year at NSA Molesworth; and how and where they have been disposed of.

Mr. Soames: There have been no confirmed cases in the past year of polychorinated biphenyls being found in equipment passed to the US defence reutilisation and marketing organisation at RAF Molesworth. However, five items received by the DRMO were suspected of containing PCBs and were therefore disposed of through an approved United Kingdom contractor licensed to dispose of PCB-contaminated equipment.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisation operates and controls the joint analysis centre at NSA Molesworth; and what is its nationality.

Mr. Soames: The joint analysis centre at RAF Molesworth is operated by the United States European Command. RAF Molesworth is a Ministry of Defence site made available to United States visiting forces and the facilities operate there with the full knowledge and consent of the British Government.

HEALTH

Private Finance Initiatives

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in taking forward the private finance initiative in the North West region.

Mr. Sackville: Good progress has been made taking forward the private finance initiative in North West region. Since the initiative was launched in November 1992, six projects have been approved, each with a capital value of £1 million or over. That is bringing £19 million of private sector capital to the region.

I shall place full details in the Library.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in taking forward the private finance initiative in the South Thames region.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member of Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway) earlier today.

Breast Cancer

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to instigate a national action plan on breast cancer.

Mr. Sackville: I have no plans to instigate a national action plan specifically for breast cancer. The Chief Medical Officer's expert advisory group on cancer published earlier this year a report recommending general principles to improve all cancer services. The Department is currently evaluating comments on that report; so far those are very largely favourable.

Dental Services

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met representatives of the British Dental Association to discuss the Green Paper on dental services.

Mr. Malone: I met representatives from the British Dental Association on 29 September, when a range of matters were discussed.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received within the past 18 months from individual dental surgeons and the various professional bodies which represent them.

Mr. Malone: We received many written representations from, and held many meetings with, dentists and their representatives in the 18 months to July 1994. Since then, our consultation on the Green Paper "Improving NHS Dentistry" has increased our contacts with the profession. Officials have gone to many meetings organised by local dental committees and others to listen to dentists' views. The consultation period ends on 1 November.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what arrangements a dentist may reclaim a proportion of the business rates from his local family health services authority by declaring their percentage NHS private income; what details she has for the last three years of the trend in private dental income for non-completely de-registered dentists; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Dentists supplying treatment under the general dental services are entitled to reimbursement of non-domestic rates under determination 9 of the statement of dental remuneration. The level of remuneration is subject to annual minimum and maximum levels and reflects the percentage of general dental services income to the dentist against his total income. No information on the individual entitlement calculations is available centrally.

Performance Tables

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in the publication of performance tables in the North West region.

Mr. Sackville: Performance tables for the North West region are included in "The Patient's Charter Hospital and Ambulance Services Comparative Performance Guide 1993–94", published by the Department of Health in June, copies of which are available in the Library. Information has not been published separately for the North West region.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received regarding the availability of infertility treatment under the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Between 1 April 1994 and 30 September 1994 we received 92 letters about the provision of infertility treatment.

Under-16s (Pregnancies)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress in limiting the rate of conception among the under 16-year-olds.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991, the rate of conceptions among under 16s fell from 10·1 per thousand to 9·3, the first fall in 10 years. The 1992 conceptions data will be available later in the year.

Junior Doctors

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior doctor posts which entail working more than 83 hours remain in the Trent region; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: There are no posts contracted for more than 83 hours a week in Trent region. Those had been eliminated by 1 April 1993.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior doctor posts which entail working more than 83 hours remain in the South West region, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: There are no longer any posts contracted for more than 83 hours a week in the South and West region.

Community Care

Mr. William O' Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the adequacy or resources for the provision of community care in the Yorkshire and Humberside region; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We have received representations about the community care resources for Wakefield and North Yorkshire. No such representations have been received about Humberside's resources.

General Practitioners

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners are fundholders in the North West.

Mr. Malone: There are currently 1,091 general practitioner fundholders in North West region, serving 34 per cent. of the population; more are preparing to join next April.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the change in the number of GPs in the London implementation group in its first two years.

Mr. Malone: The London implementation group has recently appointed two general practitioners, who practise within the capital, to provide direct advice on general practice issues. This is a shared, part-time, appointment.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the conditions and terms and budget of the early exit scheme for GPs in the London implementation zone.

Mr. Malone: There is no early exit scheme for general practioners in the London implementation zone.

Mental Health

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding her policy on the treatment of long-term mental health patients.

Mr. Bowis: Various, from a variety of sources.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names and relevant district health authority of each of the residential psychiatric hospitals (a) closed since 1979 and (b) scheduled for future closure; and if she will give for each hospital (i) the date of actual and expected closure, (ii) the numbers of sectioned and voluntary patients in each prior to any run down, (iii) the sums received for completed sales and (c) the maximum number of doctors or qualified nurses employed since 1979.

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 17 October 1994]: The information available centrally will be placed in the Library and has been compiled from data collected as part of the surveys of English mental health hospitals conducted on behalf of the mental health task force. Those surveys are confined to the 130 long stay "water tower" hospitals which were open on 31 December 1960 and information is not held on other psychiatric hospitals which may have closed or be scheduled for closure.

Information has not been collected centrally on the numbers and status of patients in the long-stay hospitals before run down or on receipts from particular land sales.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effects of the weighted capitation formula on mental health services in inner city areas such as Leeds, with particular reference to the effect of the absence of any weighting for social deprivation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: A review of weighted capitation has taken place and the national formula is to be modified in a number of respects to take account of new information and better statistical techniques. The sensitivity of the formula has been improved by including a separate index of the factors which affect the need for psychiatric services. This modified formula will be applied to regions in 1995–96.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific analysis her Department has conducted on the cost and efficiency of introducing performance-related pay to the clinical grades in the national health service.

Mr. Malone: Implementation of local pay arrangements is for national health service trusts to determine, taking into account the individual health care objectives contained in their agreed business plans. The assessment of the cost and efficiency of schemes is also a local matter.

NHS Executive Building, Leeds

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the final cost of the new NHS Executive building in Leeds; how many staff it was designed to hold; how many staff it currently holds; and how many staff it will hold after the planned reductions.

Mr. Sackville: Quarry house houses staff of the Benefits Agency and Central Adjudication Services in the Department of Social Security, as well as the national health service executive. The final cost of the main construction contract was approximately £55·4 million. Quarry house was designed to hold around 2,000 staff. Current numbers are around 1,880. The forward staffing requirements of the NHS executive headquarters in Quarry house have not yet been decided.

Conception Rates

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 21 July, Official Report, column 607, if she will give the same information on rates of conceptions for each regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

Measles-rubella Immunisation Campaign

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total projected cost of the schools-based measles- rubella immunisation campaign.

Mr. Sackville: The cost of the measles immunisation campaign in England has been estimated at about £20 million. This covers the cost of vaccine, syringes, other consumables, cost to the national health service of immunising children and publicity.

Children in Care

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress made in implementing the recommendations of the 1991 Utting report on children in the public care and the 1992 Warner report on choosing with care.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr Kirkwood) on 24 October, Official Report, c. 446.

Eating Disorders

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has given to health authorities on establishing help lines for families and sufferers of eating disorders; and what advice she has given to health authorities on establishing clinics dedicated to helping sufferers of eating disorders following the publication of the report on eating disorders published by the Royal College of Psychiatrists in 1989.

Mr. Bowis: General advice to purchasing authorities on the development of local mental health services is given in the second edition of the mental illness key area handbook published last month. Eating disorders are mentioned among the disorders primarily affecting women for which appropriate provision should be made. Copies of the mental illness key area handbook are available in the Library.

Blood Supply

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are for donors to be paid for blood donation; and what plans there are for introducing charges for the supply of blood.

Mr. Sackville: There are no plans for donors to be paid for blood donation. We have always supported the principle of voluntary unpaid donation which underpins the safety of the blood supply in this country. We are justly proud of our blood service, and our system of voluntary donation, which we believe to be among the best in the world.

The National Blood Service recoups, through blood handling charges, the cost of collecting, testing, processing and transporting the blood it supplies to hospitals. There is never any charge for the blood itself which is freely given by our voluntary donors.

Pain Relief

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many specialists in pain relief there are in the NHS.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally, but all doctors receive training in pain control.

VAMP Research Database

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for the future of the VAMP research database in primary care.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health is currently reviewing the use of the general practice research database for public health monitoring and other health purposes and will decide before the end of the year whether it will contribute any funding to it beyond March 1995.

Foetal Tissue

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken as a result of the publication of the report by the Human Fertility and Embryology Authority on the use of foetal ovarian tissue for research into Parkinson's disease and other afflictions.

Mr. Sackville: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's report relates only to the genetic material in ovarian tissue which might be used to treat women who are infertile or to produce embryos for research. The Government have welcomed the authority's conclusions. Copies of the report have been sent by the authority to all research and treatment centres licensed under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

Guidelines on the use of foetuses or foetal material for other purposes is set out in the report of the "Review of the Guidance on the Research use of Foetuses and Foetal Material"—the Polkinghorne report. This was distributed in 1989 to all health authorities and to private sector places approved under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967. Copies of both reports are available in the Library.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for health (1) if she will make a statement setting out the reasons for her Department's policy in respect of the making available of alternative vaccines for parents who do not wish their children to be vaccinated with products manufactured using the tissue of aborted babies;

(2) upon what dates she received letters from the hon. Member for Congleton registering concern about the use in vaccines of tissue from aborted babies; and what action he took as a result of those warnings to ensure that alternative products were made available.

Mr. Sackville: A letter was received from the hon. Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 7 October 1994 about the growth of rubella vaccine on a cell line derived from cells taken from an aborted foetus in 1966. All rubella vaccine is grown in this way and so no alternative can be made available. To develop rubella vaccine grown in an alternative cell line would require full safety and efficacy testing as this would be a completely new vaccine. Even if successful, this would take seven to 10 years.

Rubella and oral polio are the only vaccines in the childhood immunisation programme which are grown in human cell lines. Where there is an alternative vaccine source which is not grown in a human cell line, it can be offered. That applies to oral polio vaccine. For rubella vaccine, there is no alternative source.

Operations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations will be performed at (a) Ealing hospital and (b) other national health service trust hospitals during the current year; what were the figures for the final year before they became national health service trust hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information about prospective operations is not available centrally. Ealing hospital national health service trust had 8,070 operating theatre cases in 1992–93 compared with 7,626 in 1991–92 before its establishment as a NHS trust. Corresponding figures for the NHS in England are 3,543,119 in 1992–93 and 3,514,751 in 1991–92.

National Blood Authority

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultancies have been engaged by the National Blood Authority; for what purposes; and at what cost in each case.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority was established to tackle the acknowledged duplication of effort and inconsistency which previously existed. The authority operates with a small headquarters organisation, preferring to employ expert consultancies for limited periods to undertake particular tasks rather than increase its headquarters management posts. The following consultancies have been engaged by the headquarters of the National Blood Authority since its formation on 1 April 1993.

Bain & Co. To assist with a major review of Bio Products Laboratory	350,000
Bain & Co. To assist with a major strategic review of the Transfusion Service	682,000
Butler Bloor To review the Information Technology systems in place at all Regional Transfusion Centres	20,000
CSC To assist in the formulation and implementation of a new Information Technology strategy for the Transfusion Service	152,000
Fitch & Co To assist the Authority in formulating and implementing an identity and communications review	46,000
Comind To assist with the preparation of standard operating procedures in the Transfusion Service	7,000

The proposals for the future structure of the transfusion centre network, if implemented in full, are expected to produce savings available to the National Health Service for improved blood collection and lower handling costs to hospitals for blood and blood products, for £10 million per year.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of press officers currently employed by her Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 15 press officers are currently employed in the Department. They are all based in London. None are based in the Palace of Westminster.

Care of the Elderly

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has of elderly residents of private care or nursing homes being transferred to more specialised units in the ownership of the same company some considerable distance from where they originate, when similar units exist in the ownership of other companies either in their home area or nearer to it; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Air Pollution

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the effects of air pollution from road transport on the health of people (a) in towns and cities and (b) in rural areas.

Mr. Sackville: Road transport generates a range of air pollutants including oxides of nitrogen, volatile organic compounds and particulate material. The Department of Health advisory group on the medical aspects of air pollution episodes—MAAPE—has considered the effects on health of certain traffic-related pollutants and the Department has published its reports. Those are on ozone, 1991, sulphur dioxide, acid aerosols and particulates, 1992, and oxides of nitrogen, 1993. Copies of the reports are available in the Library.

MAAPE is currently considering the health effects of combination of air pollutants. Its report is expected in the first quarter of 1995. The Department of Health expert committee on the medical effects of air pollutants is keeping the health effects of air pollutants under review, and will report on the findings of its two sub-groups, on asthma and particles respectively, in late 1994 and early 1995.

In rural areas, the air pollutant of most concern is ozone; levels in summer sometimes exceeding those at which effects upon health would be expected in some individuals.

The Transport Select Committee is publishing today its report on transport-related air pollution in London, to which the Government will respond in due course.

Asthma

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice her Department gives to health authorities to ensure that carers for children with asthma require the best possible training; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has established a programme of chronic disease management for asthma. The objective of this programme is to make the treatment of patients with asthma more systematic. Approximately 90 per cent. of all general practitioners have been approved to take part in the programme. Those doctors give advice to the parents of children with asthma, who in turn give the vast majority of day-to-day care. To qualify, the programme must include a call and recall system from a register of patients, the education of newly diagnosed patients, or their carers when appropriate, and continued education. GPs must ensure that all patients with asthma, or their carers as appropriate, receive relevant continuing education, including supervision of inhaler technique if appropriate. GPs are also responsible for the preparation of individual management plans for each patient which are generally subject to review every six months.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will make a statement on co-operation with the Department of Education in ensuring that all schools have an active asthma policy, taking into consideration the total school environment.

Mr. Sackville: It is our joint policy that teachers should, in consultation with parents and with advice from general practitioners and the school health service, do all that is reasonable to enable children with medical conditions such as asthma to obtain maximum benefit from education and to participate as fully as possible in school life. As far as is practicable, children are encouraged to manage their own conditions.

Ministerial Meetings

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in the past two years she or her ministerial colleagues met representatives of local authorities to discuss local health matters; on what date such meetings were held; and with which local authorities.

Mr. Bowis: The level of detail requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Ministers meet frequently with individual local authorities and with local authority associations to discuss a very wide range of issues. National health service health authorities liaise with local authorities to discuss local health matters.

Long-term Health Care

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many comments have, to date, been received on the draft guidance to health authorities on clarifying responsibilities for long-term health care; when she expects to issue final guidance to health authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Some 164.

Health Care International

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of the west midlands regional health authority's plans to transfer patients awaiting treatment at west midlands hospitals to Health Care International medical centre in Glasgow analysed between (a) travel costs, (b) hospital costs and (c) hotel costs.

Mr. Sackville: This is a local matter. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Baker, chairman of West Midlands regional health authority, for details.

SCOTLAND

Civil Servants (Sport)

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current cost to the public purse of providing all forms of sports facilities for civil servants in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I can speak only for the Scottish Office. There is currently no direct expenditure by my Department on sports facilities for civil servants by accommodation is made available in some buildings for sports and recreational activities. The cost of this accommodation, calculated by reference to the area as a proportion of the total floor area of the building, is estimated to be, £35,000.

Forestry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he intends to make sure that the "Forestry Enterprise" framework document will be subject to parliamentary scrutiny.

Sir Hector Monro: As is usual with framework documents, it will be placed in the Library of the House. Hon. Members will be able to raise it, like any other published document, in the House.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Lang: The total expenditure on official hospitality for the Scottish Office for the years in question is shown in the table.

Year	£
1990-91	65,123
1991-92	62,800
1992-93	94,385
1993-94	49,115
1994-95 (to date)	20,300

The total expenditure for agencies is as follows:

Year	SASA £	SFPA £	ROS £	HS £
1990-91	[1]—	[1]—	3,586	772·85
1991-92	[1]—	400	2,513	2,591·80
1992-93	3,235	300	5,536	7,778·65
1993-94	6,244	450	4,374	8,012·47
1994-95 (to date)	not available	not available	not available	8,012·47

[1] Figures for these years are included on the table for The Scottish Office hospitality.

Figures for other agencies are included in the departmental hospitality table and any other agencies were not in existence on the dates specified.

Health Care International

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the numbers (a) of in-patients at Health Care International in Clydebank in each week since it opened, (b) patients from overseas and (c) patients in Britain.

Mr. Stewart: Information about non-NHS patients is commercially confidential to the company. Information on NHS patients treated is not held centrally and can be obtained from individual health boards.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by whom he has been represented at Health Care International's restructuring talks; and what proposals were put on his behalf.

Mr. Stewart: Officials of Locate in Scotland and Scottish Enterprise have been involved in talks, the details of which are subject to the normal conditions of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he (a) was informed and (b) agreed that the Health Care International hospital in Clydebank should sell its equipment to its funding banks and lease the equipment back.

Mr. Stewart: The financing of any company's equipment is a matter for it to determine.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he received in respect of contracts won by the Health Care International hospital in Clydebank to treat overseas patients.

Mr. Stewart: This information is commercially confidential to the company.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place between his representatives and those of the Ministry of Defence to discuss Health Care International in Clydebank; and what was the outcome of those talks.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend's officials sought and obtained confirmation from officials in the Ministry of Defence that the Department has no interest in the hospital in the context of the re-organisation of defence medical services arising out of "Front Line First", the defence costs study. There have been no other discussions.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the date of (a) Government and (b) private sector commitment to Health Care International in Clydebank.

Mr. Stewart: Negotiations for both public and private sector support for this project were concluded in July 1991.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has accepted any proposal to turn Health Care International into an NHS trust.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 October 1994]: No.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures based on current performance for the number of health service staff she expects will see earnings (a) fall and (b) rise as a result of the introduction of relating pay to performances.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposals made to staff sides and the professions who represented groups covered by NHS review bodies and included in pay offers to staff sides of non-review body groups would strengthen the links between rewards and performance of their local organisations. Such schemes would be locally determined and depend on the achievement of local objectives for the delivery of high quality services. I would expect average earnings to continue to rise.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of chief executives of national health service trusts in each of the last four years have been paid on a performance-related pay basis.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The pay of general and senior managers in the NHS in Scotland is related to performance. While the pay of a trust chief executive is determined by the remuneration committee of that trust, this is carried out within the context of the principles applying to general and senior managers' pay.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific analysis his Department has conducted on the cost and efficiency of introducing performance-related pay to clinical grades in the national health service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Implementation of local pay arrangements is for NHS trusts to determine, taking into account the individual health care objectives contained in their agreed business plans. The assessment of the cost and efficiency of schemes is also for local determination.

Care Homes

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce dual registration of residential and nursing homes similar to the practice in England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: The Registered Establishments (Scotland) Act 1987 amended the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 do allow joint registration of residential care establishments which provide both nursing and social care with local authority social work departments and health boards. This is directly comparable with similar provisions which apply in England and Wales under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish joint health board and social work inspection and registration units for nursing and residential homes.

Mr. Lang: The Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, as amended, and the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938 already allow for collaboration between local authority social work departments and health boards in the field of joint registration of residential care establishments.

M74 Contract

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the value, progress and penalties associated with the M74 contract awarded to Messrs. Castelli and Girola;

(2) which comparable projects carried out by Messrs. Castelli and Girola persuaded his Department that they were eligible for consideration as tenderers;

(3) if he will list those occasions and locations on which officials of his Department met representatives of Messrs. Castelli and Girola prior to the award of the M74 contract;

(4) if he will list the value of tenders submitted for the M74 contract which was secured by Messrs. Castelli and Girola;

(5) what steps he took to ascertain that Messrs. Castelli and Girola were competent contractors, prior to the awarding of the M74 contract.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The requirements of the European Union procurement directive have meant that our major road construction contracts are open to tenders from companies throughout the EEC. In 1992 a joint venture company formed by Castelli and Girola submitted an application for inclusion in the tender list for the contract to upgrade the A74 to motorway between Eaglesfield and Kirkpatrick Fleming.

To support their tender application they submitted considerable documentation covering numerous examples of major road contracts carried out by each firm. Scottish Office officials met representatives of the joint venture in October 1991 in Edinburgh regarding an earlier application for an A74(M) contract and satisfied themselves that they were major contractors with worldwide experience of road construction. The two companies were also subjected to the normal vetting procedures with regard to their financial standing.

The value of the successful tender submitted by the joint venture was £23,403,562. Other tenders submitted for the contract were:

£26,186,241
£26,789,409
£29,517,413
£30,343,045

Although well advanced, the contract is running late and the completion date next month will not be met. The penalty for late completion without mitigating circumstances is £250,000 per month.

Breast Treatment

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the average time taken in each health board area in Scotland (a) to provide appointments to patients who detect breast lumps, (b) to diagnose whether or not the lump is malignant and (c) to operate if the lump is a tumour.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Information requested is not centrally available in the form requested. However, the table gives details of waiting times for confirmation or treatment.

Mean and median waiting time (days for patients admitted from the waiting list and operated on for confirmation or treatment of malignant neoplasm of female breast (ICD9 174), by health board of treatment, calendar year 1993

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the guidelines given to area health boards in setting limits on the length of time between breast lumps being detected by patients and being diagnosed as malignant or otherwise; and what are the time limits thereafter being set for operations to remove the lumps if malignant tumours are discovered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Government-funded Scottish Cancer Co-ordinating and Advisory Committee and the Scottish Cancer Therapy Network have established a joint focus group to examine all aspects of the subject ie aetiology, prevention, diagnosis, treatment and palliation, so that the adequacy of existing arrangements may be scrutinised and best practice determined. No formal guidelines exist at present.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to increase resources available for the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The incidence, morbidity and mortality associated with breast cancer are sources of concern to the Government, and we are committed to encouraging research into the causes, diagnosis, treatment and cure of the disease. The Government also funds the Scottish breast screening programme, which aims to reduce mortality in the screened population by 25 per cent. by the year 2000. All referrals under the programme are to a designated breast surgeon, who in the majority of cases will have been nominated by the woman's health board of residence. Where more complex techniques are likely to be required, referral will be to a breast surgeon working in one of the five specialist multi-disciplinary teams in Scotland. The Scottish Cancer Therapy Network, which we have established to ensure the delivery to cancer patients of the most effective and up-to-date treatment, is forming a focus group in co-operation with the Government-funded Scottish Cancer Co-ordinating and Advisory Committee to look specifically at all aspects of breast cancer, including diagnosis and treatment.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of staff in the employment of the Lord Chancellor's Department and the proportion of them who are employed in the standard regions is set out in the table.

Total numbers of staff in the Lord Chancellor Department as at 18 October 1994.

The total number of staff currently employed in Lord Chancellor's Department is 12,439.

The proportion of staff employed in the standard regions

Region	Total number of staff
Scotland	2
Northern	502
York and Humberside	1,041
East Midlands	635
North West	1,415
West Midlands	1,031
Wales	537
East Anglia	303
South East	6,183
South West	790

These figures include part time staff who have been shown as whole numbers.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has 11 advisory committees on justices of the peace and four on general commissioners of income tax in these areas. The main function of these committees is to recommend suitable people to the Lord Chancellor for judicial appointment. The normal period of appointment is six years, so arranged that approximately half the members of a committee retire every three years. Neither chairmen or members of advisory committees receive any remuneration. If the hon. Member would like more detailed information about the membership of any particular committee or committees I should be happy to provide it if he writes to me. This answer does not include appointments which exercise judicial functions.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has not organised any such receptions. However, in support of the Lord Chancellor's commitment to encourage applications for judicial appointment from suitably qualified women lawyers, the first of what is hoped will be a series of events for women lawyers was held in July at the Bar Council. The purpose of the event, arranged jointly by the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Bar Council and the Association of Women Barristers, was to provide information to women barristers on the opportunities available for appointments to part-time posts within the judiciary. There were no separately identifiable costs to the Department beyond those associated with the manpower involved.

Legal Costs Payments

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many individuals have received payments of over £100,000 to their legal costs in each of the last four years and in 1994–95.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table gives the information requested. For civil legal aid, the figures represent the number of individual legal aid certificates where gross payments, including VAT, have exceeded £100,000. For criminal legal aid, the figures show the numbers of cases where gross payments, including VAT, in excess of £100,000 have been made since it is not always possible to disaggregate payments relating to individuals in cases involving more than one defendant.

Year	Civil	Criminal	Total cases
1990–91	4	90	94
1991–92	22	66	88
1992–93	36	119	155
1993–94	54	172	226
1994 to date	41	112	153

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total amounts spent on official hospitality in the Lord Chancellor's Department each year since 1990, are given in the table. Until 1994–95, the Department had no agencies which were not separate Government Departments. The Public Trust Office, established as an agency on 1 July 1994, has no hospitality budget.

Year	Total £
1990–91	19,022·93
1991–92	20,894·90
1992–93	20,697·44
1993–94	20,476·67
1994–95 (to the end of September)	5,975·38

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date he expects the team conducting the fundamental review of his Department's expenditure to make its final report to the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The review is an internal process and there are no plans to publish any of the documents produced. Any policy changes resulting from the review will be announced in the usual way and any major changes will be the subject of public consultation. However, there is no firm timetable for this at present.

ENVIRONMENT

Public Bodies

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the non-departmental public bodies to which his Department makes appointments in the Greater London area, together with the total annual budget for each body, and the number of appointments made or renewed for each body in each of the past five years.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State makes appointments to the following non-departmental public bodies whose activities relate solely to the Greater London area. It excludes those bodies, based in London, whose activities are national.

Body	Total Annual Budget (1994–95) approx. £ million
London Docklands Development Corporation (LDDC)	116·2
London Pensions Fund Authority (LPFA)	[1]248·5
London Rent Assessment Panel (LRAP)	2·6
London Residuary Body (LRB)	[2]2·3
Stonebridge Housing Action Trust (SHAT)	1·0
Tower Hamlets Housing Action Trust (THHAT)	6·9
Waltham Forest Housing Action Trust (WFHAT)	35

[1] None of this budget is directly financed by DOE. Most of the expenditure represents the cost of pensions paid to former GLC and ILEA employees.

[2] None of this budget is directly financed by DOE.

The number of appointments and re-appointments for each of these bodies for the last five years is as follows:

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the de minimis figure of £100,000 for compulsory competitive tendering will be reviewed, following the proposal of a de minimis figure of £300,000 in respect of compulsory competitive tendering for legal services.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The two figures referred to by my hon. Friend are different in nature and purpose. The £100,000 de minimis relates to manual services, and represents the level of expenditure on a service below which the administrative cost of compulsory competitive tendering may outweigh the prospective savings. The other figure relates to the proposals to extend CCT to local authorities' legal services. The exemption from CCT of 55 per cent. of local authorities' legal work, or £300,000 by value, whichever is the greater, is designed to ensure that all authorities can maintain the necessary in-house legal expertise for advising on policy and strategic matters.

All CCT de minimis provisions are kept under review, but there are no immediate plans to change the present figures.

Marsham Tower

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current quantity of floor space in the Marsham tower Government building; how many persons are currently employed there; how much office space is envisaged in the outline redevelopment proposals currently before Westminster city council; and approximately how many office personnel could then be accommodated.

Sir Paul Beresford: The current building at 2 Marsham street has a gross floor area of 890,000 sq ft above ground and accommodates approximately 3,000 civil servants from the Departments of Environment and of Transport. The outline application for the site before Westminster city council proposes 690,00 sq ft of offices above ground as well as residential and retail uses and open space. It is too early to say how many people will be accommodated in this new space. This will depend on the design of the new buildings on the site and the requirements of the eventual occupiers.

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the likely timetable for the demolition of the Marsham street Government buildings and redevelopment of the 5 acre site; and what provision he is making for proper public consultation, including hon. Members, about the plans for the future of the site both as regards alternative usage and intensity of development and building design.

Sir Paul Beresford: The 2 Marsham street building will be vacated by the end of 1997. Demolition will then commence and is likely to take a minimum of 18 months. Redevelopment of the site could start in 2000 with the first building becoming available for occupation in 2002. A public exhibition of the outline proposals for the site was held following the submission of the outline planning application on 18 July 1994. It is envisaged that there will be a further opportunity for the public to view the proposals after a presentation to the Royal Fine Art Commission later this year. This is an outline application and therefore proposes uses and scale of development but not building design.

Land Searches

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his conclusions on the consultation exercise on a statutory scheme for local authority land searches.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Responses to the consultation carried out earlier this year demonstrated wide-ranging support for a 10 working days timescale for local authority responses to homebuyers' standard search inquiries. The proposals set out in the consultation document are being considered further in the light of responses, and a further announcement will be made in due course.

Water Saving

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to issuing building regulations guidelines about water saving devices for new and refurbished buildings, including sprinkler taps and showers.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The consultation document, "Using Water Wisely" issued in July 1992 outlined various ways of saving water. The Government have considered the responses to that document and propose to issue an action plan shortly. A separate consultation paper will also be issued soon on replacements for the water byelaws which expire in England in 1997. This paper will consider the scope for addressing this issue through building regulations as well as in alternative ways.

Local Government Act 1974

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will institute a public inquiry into the operation of section 26(9) of the Local Government Act 1974;

(2) what considerations underlay the Government's refusal to invoke the provisions of section 26(9) of the Local Government Act 1974 to close the loophole in the investigation of alleged breaches of the national code of local government conduct raised in the correspondence he and his predecessors have had with the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe in the case of Mr. Arthur Hodgkinson.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Personnel matters are specifically excluded from the local government ombudsman's jurisdiction by schedule 5 of the Local Government Act 1974. It is not the ombudsman's responsibility to investigate breaches of the national code of local government conduct other than to include them in an investigation where there is an allegation of maladministration involving personal injustice. There is no loophole to close and my right hon. Friend will not be instituting a public inquiry into the operation of section 26(9) of the Local Government Act 1974.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the conformity with the national code of local government conduct of the action of Wigan metropolitan borough council in the case of Mr. Arthur Hodgkinson.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None. The Secretary of State has no role in assessing the compliance of individual councillors with the code.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Gummer: My Department has not organised any receptions of this kind.

Yorkshire and Humberside Projects

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payments have been made by his Department during the last five years to individuals or companies in Yorkshire and Humberside in support of projects which it was assumed would create employment; and how many jobs have been created in each case.

Sir Paul Beresford: Until April of this year, my Department awarded city grant to private developers in support of projects designed to create employment. On 1 April, responsibility for city grant was assumed by English Partnerships.

In the five years to April 1994, £43·75 million of city grant was awarded in Yorkshire and Humberside in support of 41 schemes, which were expected to create 6,318 new jobs.

Dearne Valley City Challenge Scheme

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what expenditure has so far been incurred in support of the Dearne Valley city challenge scheme; and how many permanent jobs have so far been created.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Dearne valley will receive £37·5 million in city challenge funding over five years from 1992–93, subject to satisfactory performance. Up to the end of September, Dearne valley city challenge has spent £15·252 million implementing its action plan. A total of 777 jobs has been created.

Air Pollution, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information available on traffic-related air pollution in London; and what policy objectives he has for improving air quality.

Mr. Atkins: The London energy study carried out by the London research centre was published 15 September 1993, it was funded by the European Commission, London Electricity plc and the Department of the Environment. One of the principal outputs of the study was a very detailed inventory of energy use, and the resultant emissions of pollutants to the London atmosphere covering almost 2,000 sq km in and around London. The table illustrates the sources for each pollutant as well as the total for London and as a percentage of United Kingdom total emissions for 1991.

London (1991)	Percentage of total emissions
	Carbon dioxide (as carbon)	Sulphur dioxide	Black smoke	Carbon monoxide	Nitrogen oxides	Volatile organic compounds
Road transport	33	22	96	99	76	97
Other transport	3	1	2	1	4	1
Electricity supply industry	2	0	0	0	1	0
Other industry	13	43	1	0	5	1
Domestic	30	1	0	0	6	1
Other	19	32	2	0	8	0
Total (thousand tonnes)	8,508	26	19	648	137	116
London as a percentage of United Kingdom total emissions	5·3	0·7	4·2	6·7	5·0	4·8

The term volatile organic compounds does not include methane. The evaporation of petrol from production, storage and distribution is included under other industry. Evaporation from petrol tanks and carburettors of motor vehicles is included under road transport.

Sources of volatile organic compounds given in the United Kingdom section of this table include emissions from non-energy related sources, such as industrial processes and solvents. These account for 50 per cent. of the total emissions. The sources included in the London section of the table are related only to the use of energy. Percentages do not add to 100 due to rounding.

The Government are committed to securing, throughout the United Kingdom, good air quality based on a framework of exacting standard which takes full account of health and environmental effects. They will announce later this year proposals for meetings standards efficiently and cost-effectively.

Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many executive agencies and non-departmental public bodies have established policies to implement the Environmental Information Regulations 1992; and what procedures are in place to monitor the production and operation of these policies.

Sir Paul Beresford: Executive agencies and non-departmental public bodies that have public responsibilities in relation to the environment are under a duty to implement the environmental information regulations.

The Department of the Environment does not continuously monitor the implementation of these regulations, but in 1997 will give the European Commission a report on the experience gained in operating directive 90/313 — which required the regulations to be made — and will then ask bodies for information relating to the practical implementation of the directive.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the total expenditure to date and (b) expenditure in legal fees by each executive agency and non-departmental public body on the implementation of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him today. The Department of the Environment does not keep centrally information of this kind.

Hadrian's Wall

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when he will announce his decision on the proposed Hadrian's Wall path national trail.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretary of State has today decided to approve the Countryside Commission's report in respect of the Hadrian's Wall path national trail, with a modification to the route as submitted by the Commission.

In reaching this decision, careful consideration has been given to all the views expressed, including from those directly affected by the route and those concerned at its impact on the archaeology of the wall. The Secretary of State is satisfied that the Commission, in conjunction with English Heritage, has taken full account of the implications of establishing the path alongside this world heritage site.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Docklands light railway.

Mr. Gummer: The Government are to privatise the Docklands light railway in line with their 1992 manifesto commitment. The first step will be taken in 1996, when DLR operations will be franchised to the private sector for a period of about seven years. The second step will be taken at the end of the franchise period, when the aim will be to transfer the railway as a whole into the private sector.

In parallel, as part of the private finance initiative, the private sector will take responsibility for building an extension of the DLR to Lewisham, as announced by my right hon. and learned Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer last year. Detailed planning for the Lewisham extension is now complete and I have today given DLR Ltd. my consent to start the competition to select a private concession company.

DLR PRIVATISATION

Through privatisation, the Government aim to ensure that the DLR will continue to develop as a highly efficient, customer-oriented and market-driven passenger service for Docklands, with reduced dependence on public subsidy.

The DLR's operational performance has improved markedly over the last two years. Moreover, existing programmes to improve DLR's signalling and train control system are well advanced and will be complete in 1995, providing the capacity for more flexible service patterns and operating practices. The railway should return to full seven day services across the network during the first half of 1995. The franchising of DLR operations in 1996 will therefore allow private sector disciplines to be applied to consolidate the substantial improvements already made in efficiency, reliability and quality of service.

I have asked Sir Anthony Gill, chairman of the DLR, to put in hand the preparatory work required to enable franchise to be let in 1996. The private sector operator will be expected to take responsibility for marketing services, maintaining trains, stations and track, and for all DLR's operations, including train services on the new extension to Lewisham when it opens, for a period of about seven years. The franchisee will have to have a statutorily approved railway safety case in place before starting to operate train services.

DLR will be consulting its work force on the planned franchise. We expect any franchise to amount to a transfer for the purposes of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations and, if this is the case, the franchisee will assume responsibility for DLR employees.

Neither the letting of the franchise nor any subsequent sale of DLR will require legislation.

DLR LEWISHAM EXTENSION

In his Budget statement on 30 November 1993, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that the private sector was to be invited to finance, build and maintain a 4·2 km extension of the DLR to Lewisham. Following the completion of detailed planning, I have today given my consent for the DLR to start the competition to select a private concession company to deliver the project. The first phase of market testing, the prequalification of bidders, will take three months. Full tendering is expected to start in February 1995, and DLR Ltd. should be in a position to award the concession contract before the end of the year. Construction should start in 1996, with the extension opening in 1999.

A year ago, the provisional indications were that the project could not be financially viable as a private sector concession if it included stations previously planned for Island Gardens and Cutty Sark. At my request, DLR Ltd. and its owners, the London Docklands development corporation, consulted local interests on the option of deleting those two stations from the project. They also appointed financial advisers to validate the financial modelling and to develop a commercial structure for the project. Further, in July 1994, the Lord Chairman of Committees in another place ruled that any decision to omit Island Gardens station would breach an undertaking given to Parliament by the promoters of the London Docklands Railway (Lewisham) Act 1993 in relation to that station.

In the light of these developments, DLR Ltd. has recommended to me that, on the basis of its latest cost and revenue forecasts, the Lewisham extension project is potentially viable financially with the new station at Island Gardens included. But it has concluded that the financial case for inclusion of a station at Cutty Sark is poor and that unless the cost of providing the station can be met by third party contributions, Cutty Sark should be omitted from the project.

I am pleased that we are able to proceed with the Lewisham extension with six stations because of the regeneration benefits this will provide both north and south of the Thames. In particular, the inclusion of a new station at Island Gardens on the Lewisham extension, close to the Thames foot tunnel, and one at Greenwich, about 700 m from the Cutty Sark and the historic waterfront, will provide dramatically improved access to the various important tourist destinations in the area.

Nevertheless, I have received a number of representations arguing for a station next to the Cutty Sark itself. I am willing to allow more time for local interest to finalise a financing package of their own. My decision therefore is that if funding is fully and unconditionally committed by the time DLR has prequalified bidders for the project next January, the project may go ahead to full tendering with Cutty Sark station included. Otherwise it will go out to tender on a six-station basis, excluding the Cutty Sark. Contributors must agree to meet the actual costs of the station, whatever they are shown to be through market testing, the current estimate being £14 million at 1994 prices. Funding pledges must be contracted and unconditional, with agreement that the cash will be provided during the construction period. There is no question of the Government's providing grant or subsidy towards a Cutty Sark station.

This arrangement will allow an extended opportunity to those who support a station at Cutty Sark to come forward with funding, whilst eliminating uncertainty and potential delay for the Lewisham extension project as a whole.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since the introduction of housing benefit, and for (a) local authority tenancies, (b) housing association tenancies and (c) private tenancies, the average weekly housing benefit payable and this figure expressed as a percentage of the average income support paid per tenant household.

Mr. Roger Evans: I have been asked to reply.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Postgraduate Research Training

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what conclusions he has drawn from the public consultation on policies for postgraduate research training announced in the White Paper, "Realising Our Potential: A Strategy For Science, Engineering and Technology"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Office of Science and Technology has consulted widely on those policies. I am most grateful to all who responded to consultation.

We need research students who are equipped with the skills and knowledge that they need to fulfil their potential in whichever sector they eventually choose to take up employment.

There was widespread support for the White Paper's objectives of improving the quality of research training in the United Kingdom, and making it more relevant to the needs of both students and their future employers.

I am asking the Director General of the Research Councils, Sir John Cadogan, to write to the research councils with further guidance on how best to work with universities and employers to achieve those objectives. In particular, he will be inviting the councils to support new, one-year master's degrees by research on a pilot basis. We estimate that some 250 students will enrol on the first pilot courses. These new courses will offer a valuable addition to the range of options open to postgraduate research students.

The way forward must be to test how effective the courses will be as a direct route into employment or as a preparation for the PhD. I welcome the initiative of universities and employers who are keen to lead the way. There will be no requirement for all research students funded by the research councils to complete a master's year. I would expect the councils to continue to fund PhD students for normally no longer than three years.

I am placing in the Library: a copy of Sir John Cadogan's letter; a list of the respondents to the consultation; the responses from the CVCP and CBI, which I believe give a helpful general summary of the views expressed by higher education and industry; and a press statement which I am also making today. Copies of consultation responses not made in confidence are available on request from the OPSS.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: No such receptions have been held.

Official Report (Price)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to enable differential pricing of the Official Report so as to make it cheaper for public and academic libraries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Differential pricing already exists. Under long-standing arrangements aimed at facilitating public access to Government information, public libraries are entitled to buy all HMSO publications, including the Official Report, at half price.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each, the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: In the Departments and agencies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible, and other areas which fall to the Cabinet Office vote, the information is as follows:

Access to Public Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the steps he has taken to consult the Council on Tribunals with respect to the preparation of a system of external review over cases where information is withheld from disclosure under the code of practice on access to public information, as indicated at paragraph 6.16, page 48 of the White Paper on open government of July 1993, Cm. 2290.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Independent external review of the code of practice on access to Government information is already provided by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration. The proposals on page 48 of the White Paper relate to access rights and not to the code of practice.

The council's initial comments on the White Paper proposals are included in the volume of consultation responses deposited in the House of Commons Library. They will be consulted further as detailed proposals are developed.

Daresbury and Rutherford Appleton Laboratories

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how the Daresbury and Rutherford Appleton laboratories will be affected as a result of the planned changes to the research councils.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to the reply 11 February 1994, Official Report, c. 492–93]:

Following an in-depth examination of the need for, management, operation, funding and other aspects of the laboratory, I have decided that, subject to parliamentary approval, the Daresbury and Rutherford Appleton laboratories should be established as an independent entity with effect from April 1995, under the terms of the Science and Technology Act 1965. The chief executive of the laboratory will be in the same relationship to the accounting officer and Director General of Research Councils within the Office of Public Service and Science as the chief executive of the six other research councils. I intend in due course to lay before both Houses a draft Order in council, which will be subject to affirmative resolution procedure.

Daresbury and Rutherford are national assets. They have been thoroughly reviewed, and my conclusion is that they should remain in public ownership. I believe that according them independent status is the right way to proceed, but with strong emphasis on operating in a commercial manner, and particularly meeting the needs of the customers.

By announcing these new arrangements now, and by aiming to introduce them as quickly as possible, we can ensure the nation gets the best return from these assets.

I am confident that we are creating the right environment for this major resource of the United Kingdom science and engineering base to flourish, and play a full part in carrying forward our White Paper objectives of wealth creation and improving the quality of life.

Net Running Costs Agencies
Vehicle Certification Agency	2,629
Transport Research Laboratory	17,000
Trading Fund (off Vote)
Vehicle Inspectorate	44,600
Trading Fund (on Vote)
Driving Standards Agency	49,3000

Budget allocations for 1995–96 have not yet been made.

British Rail Employees

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Rail freight services employees are being removed from York to Doncaster; and when these posts will leave York.

Mr. Watts: This is a commercial matter for British Rail. I am not aware of any such proposal.

Channel Tunnel Link

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the timetable for connections from south Wales to Waterloo to join Eurostar trains to Paris and Brussels.

Mr. Watts: The timing of the connecting services from south Wales is a matter for British Rail, in consultation with European Passenger Services. It is intended that as the Eurostar frequency builds up in 1995, the three trains from south Wales to Waterloo each weekday will connect with the Eurostar service.

Live Railtracks (Accidents)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have (a) died and (b) been seriously injured by stepping on live railtracks in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years; and what steps are being taken to prevent such accidents from happening, with particular reference to east Dulwich station.

Mr. Watts: Details of electrocutions both fatal and seriously injured, are given in appendices 7 and 8 of the "Annual Report on Railway Safety in Great Britain" copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is discussing with Railtrack whether any reasonably practicable measures can be taken to prevent a recurrence of the type of accident that occurred at east Dulwich on 9 July.

A249 Iwade Bypass

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on a preferred route for the A249 Iwade bypass to Queenborough improvement scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: I am pleased to announce the preferred route for this scheme. It is the route on which the public were consulted last November.

This scheme, which includes a second crossing of the Swale on a high level bridge, will greatly assist the development and expansion of industry and commerce and increase competitiveness and employment on the Isle of Sheppey. I am confident that this much-needed improvement of the A249 will be welcomed by all those whose lives are affected daily by the existing, wholly inadequate link with the mainland and the lifting bridge across the Swale.

In choosing a route we have had the difficult task of balancing the needs of people and the local economy with important environmental considerations. I believe we have struck the right balance. The preferred route will avoid the key areas of ecological importance and make the best use of the existing road corridor.

Airports

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what are the differences between the current Civil Aviation Authority and the proposed joint airworthiness authority specifications concerning permissible duty hours by aircraft flight deck and cabin crew; and which specifications will be applied in the United Kingdom if there is any disparity between the joint airworthiness authority specifications and the Civil Aviation Authority specifications currently in force;

(2) on how many occasions one aircraft bound for a United Kingdom international airport has declared a low fuel emergency when its airport of intended landing has been closed to normal operations; on how many occasions two or more aircraft bound for any United Kingdom international airport have simultaneously declared a low fuel emergency when their respective airports of intended landing have been closed to normal operations; on how many occasions one aircraft bound for Heathrow has declared a low fuel emergency when Heathrow airport has been closed to normal operations; and on how many occasions two or more aircraft bound for Heathrow airport simultaneously have declared a low fuel emergency when Heathrow airport has been closed to normal operations;

(3) what procedures exist to ensure the safe landing of two or more aircraft which have simultaneously declared a low fuel emergency within any one terminal control area, control zone or control area (a) when all suitable airports are operative and (b) when a designated airport or one or more designated runways has been closed to normal operations;

(4) on how many occasions over the last five years and for what reasons (a) one of the United Kingdom international airports has been closed to all normal operations, (b) Heathrow airport has been closed to all normal operations and (c) more than one of the United Kingdom international airports have been closed to all normal operations at any one time;

(5) what consideration he has given to the United Kingdom to the minimum fuel advisory system as practised in the USA; and if he will make a statement;

(6) on how many occasions during the last five years a low fuel emergency has been declared by (a) one aircraft, bound for a United Kingdom international airport (b) more than one aircraft bound for any United Kingdom international airport at any one time, (c) one aircraft bound for Heathrow airport and (d) more than one aircraft bound for Heathrow airport at any one time.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Norris: No.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the past year—1 October 1993 to the present—the spouse of one Minister in this Department travelled abroad once to accompany that Minister on public duties. The total cost to public funds of the spouse's travel was £923·66. There were no occasions when such travel was undertaken at own cost.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Department who are normally based (a) in the Department in London, (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 25 October 1994]: (a) Thirteen, excluding press officers employed by executive agencies directly accountable to the Department. (b) None. (c) Regional services in England are provided by the Central Office of Information.

Mineral Oil Excise Duty

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations are being carried out on EC directive 92/82; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

Article 10 of the directive requires that every two years, and for the first time not later than 31 December 1994, the Council, acting on the basis of a report and where appropriate, a proposal from the Commission, shall examine the rates of mineral oil excise duty laid down in the directive and, acting unanimously after consulting the European Parliament, shall adopt the necessary measures. No report has yet been produced and no proposal has yet been put forward by the Commission.

Road Surfaces

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of (a) the current noise comparisons between porous asphalt and whisper concrete; and (b) how they compare with conventional asphalt and concrete as presently used in road construction.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Richard Page, dated 26 October 1994:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts MP, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning comparisons between porous asphalt, whisper concrete and conventional road surfaces.

We have in hand trials comparing whisper concrete with conventional asphalt and concrete road surfaces. Also, data is available on the comparative performance of porous asphalt and conventional asphalt and concrete road surfaces. From the trials some early indications are available of the noise performance of whisper concrete. These are that for surfaces with equivalent skidding resistance, overall noise levels for whisper concrete are slightly less than for conventional hot rolled asphalt. They are significantly less than for some of the more heavily textured concrete surfaces provided in the past.

In the case of porous asphalt as used in the United Kingdom, noise levels are about 5 dB(A) less than for a hot rolled asphalt surface initially, although this difference may reduce to about 3 dB(A) as the pores become clogged. The relative noise performance of porous asphalt compared with concrete surfaces is the same as that given above for hot rolled asphalt where skidding resistance characteristics are similar. However, the texture provided on concrete roads to date has tended to be deeper than the minimum required under the specification with the result that the difference in noise with porous asphalt would be greater in the early life of the road.

We have not made any direct comparison of the respective noise performance of porous asphalt and whisper concrete. However, from the data available so far, we can infer the likely relative noise performance of these two surfaces. The picture emerging is that traffic noise levels attributable to whisper concrete are higher than those achieved with porous asphalt.

M3/M27 Link

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the M3/M27 link to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Atkinson, dated 26 October 1994:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the expected completion of the final section of the M3 between Bar End and Compton.

No firm date has yet been fixed for the completion of the motorway but we expect it to be ready before the end of the year. Associated work on local roads, landscaping and restoration of the old A33 Winchester Bypass will continue until early next year.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the role of independent consultants in the formulation of tourism policy since his appointment.

Mr. Dorrell: My officials are working closely with the British Tourist Authority and the English tourist board on the development of a tourism strategy for the next 10 years. Consultants are assisting with the analysis.

Specialist Advisers

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what plans he has to appoint specialist advisers to his Department;

(2) if he has appointed a specialist adviser to his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department has access to specialist advice from a wide range of sources. I have no current plans to recruit a personal special advisor.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Sproat: My Department does not organise such receptions.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Dorrell: There have been no occasions on which the spouse of a Department of National Heritage Minister has travelled abroad at public expense. Such travel has been undertaken on two occasions at own cost.

PRIME MINISTER

United States (National Performance Review Team)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what contact his Government have had with Vice-President Gore's national performance review team; and will he make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, when he was Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, met Vice-President Gore and members of his national performance review team. The citizens charter unit has also had discussions with the national performance review team, and continues to keep in touch with it.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how may people attend.

The Prime Minister: No such receptions have been held.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of all documents, letters, or accounts he has signed which are written in a language he does not understand.

The Prime Minister: It is my policy to allow photographic reproductions of my signature to appear on official documents translated into languages other than English. However it is not my normal practice to place such documents in the Library.

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has for the repeal of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden), Official Report, 24 October, column 492.

Mark Thatcher

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions Ministers in Her Majesty's Government have been informed of payments made to Mr. Mark Thatcher or to companies associated with him in relation to defence contracts.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 October 1994]: As far as I am aware, no credible information of this kind has been submitted to Ministers.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cider Apple Trees

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards planting cider apple trees in set-aside areas.

Mr. Jack: The rules of the Community's arable area payments scheme do not permit the growing of food crops on land set aside under the scheme. Cider apple trees are viewed as a food crop. Crops for non-food use, such as biofuels, are allowed to be grown on set-aside land.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Jack: No receptions have been organised by this Department for people expressing an interest in public appointment.

Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of spongiform encephalopathy have been established in (a) kudu, (b) nyala, (c) eland, (d) gemsbok, (e) Arabian oryx, (f) puma and (g) cheetah in each of the last four years, with the age of each animal involved and the suspected cause of transmission.

Mrs. Browning: The following numbers of cases have been confirmed in Great Britain in the species listed in each of the last four years.

	1990	1991	1992	1993
Kudu	(19) 1	(37,36*) 2	—	—
Nyala	—	—	—	—
Eland	—	(27, 28) 2	(24) 1	—
Gemsbok	—	—	—	—
Arabian Oryx	—	—	—	—
Puma	—	(62) 1	—	—
Cheetah	—	—	(96) 1	(91) 1

Classification is by year of death: ages in months at the time of death are shown in brackets. Animals marked with an asterisk showed no clinical signs when they were euthanased. Disease may have spread between kudu by contact or possibly environmental contamination after being introduced in feed and transmission between eland is also possible. The puma and cheetahs were fed parts of bovine carcases, including central nervous tissue, which were deemed unfit for human consumption.

European Funding

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list in pounds sterling the allocations from PESCA for the United Kingdom and the other eligible member states and the proposed allocations to the regions in the United Kingdom which are highly dependent on fishing;

(2) what is the basis for proposed allocations of PESCA funding for (a) member states and (b) regions which are highly dependent on fishing.

Mr. Jack: The Commission has allocated PESCA funding between member states as follows:

	£ million (converted at £1 = 1·319 ecu)
Belgium	1·52
Denmark	12·3
Germany	17·44
Greece	20·55
Spain	31·46
France	21·15
Ireland	2·80
Italy	25·55
Netherlands	7·73
Portugal	19·41
United Kingdom	25·70

This breakdown is based on employment in the fisheries sector as a whole, and on the fleet reductions required by member states' multi-annual guidance programmes.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actual or previous sums of money have been allocated to the British fishing industry under the Pesca initiative; what proportion of the total EU allocation is allocated to each of the receiving nations, approximately in each European nation; how much will be allocated per person employed in the fishing industry; and what are the funds to be made available in total and per person for Devon.

Mr. Jack: The Commission has allocated Pesca funding between member states as follows:

Belgium	1·52
Denmark	12·3
Germany	17·44
Greece	20·55
Spain	31·46
France	21·15
Ireland	2·80
Italy	25·55
Netherlands	7·73
Portugal	19·41
United Kingdom	25·70

This breakdown is based on employment in the fisheries sector as a whole, and on the fleet reductions required by member states' multi-annual guidance programmes.

Mr. Jack: Seven surveys seeking public opinion have been commissioned by MAFF and its agencies since 1 October 1992. Details of these surveys are as follows. It is not possible for commercial reasons to give the cost of each survey individually. However, in total these surveys cost £190,000.

Badgers

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences have been granted for interference with badger setts following the Badgers Act 1991, now the Protection of Badgers Act 1992; and for which purposes listed in section 10 of the 1992 Act such licences were issued.

Mrs. Browning: Under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992, this Department is responsible for issuing licences to interfere with badger setts for the purposes specified in sections 10(2) and 10(3).

The Badgers Act 1991 came into force in October 1991 and the first licences were issued in February 1992. The number issued since then and the purpose for which they were issued are as follows:

Licences issued to interfere with Badger Setts

Purpose for which interference licence was issued	Number of licences issued for each period

Rabbits

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on outbreaks of viral haemorrhagic disease amongst the wild rabbit population and on the availability of vaccines to treat it.

Mrs. Browning: Viral haemorrhagic disease has been confirmed as the cause of death of four wild rabbits whose bodies were found near Tenterden in Kent—one—and Exeter in Devon—three. The presence of VHD in our wild rabbit population had been suspected for some time but only recently confirmed. The disease has been notifiable in Great Britain since 1991 and a total of 50 outbreaks in domestic and commercial rabbits have been confirmed up to 24 October this year. There were 10 outbreaks in 1993.

No vaccines to protect rabbits against VHD are currently licensed for use in the United Kingdom. Two applications for licenses have however now been received by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and are urgently being assessed under the provisional licence arrangements that came into effect on 8 September 1994.

VHD is endemic in all rabbits, including wild rabbits, in much of the rest of Europe.

Research and Development

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest available figure for his Department's total research and development expenditure for 1993–94 in (a) cash and (b) constant terms.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer to the answer given by my predecessor on 20 July 1994, Official Report, column 350–51.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures available for the number of personnel employed in his Department's research and development programme for (a) 1993–94 and (b) the latest available date.

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest available figures are those given by my predecessor on 20 July 1994, Official Report, column 350.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Jack: Over the last year, there have been no occasions in which public funds have been used to finance the cost of spouses accompanying Ministers on overseas visits, and no occasion on which such travel took place at own cost.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg on 24 and 25 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldergrave: This meeting of the Agriculture Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, again discussed the question of stronger rules for the protection of animals in transport. Member states' views continue to diverge substantially and no agreement was reached. I made clear the importance I attach to limits on travelling time and proper enforcement.

The Council also discussed a proposal from the Commission for a reduction in the required rate for set-aside for arable crops to be harvested in 1995. In the absence of an opinion from the European Parliament, no formal decision could be taken. But it was established that a qualified majority of the Council existed in favour of a reduction of three percentage points. I supported this reduction, which the Commission has assured the Council will be budget-neutral, and which will help to keep cereals market prices down and thus benefit the livestock sector.

The Council considered a discussion document from the Commission on reform of the support system for fruit and vegetables. I regard its ideas as a step in the right direction but hope that more radical changes can be agreed. The Commission intends to present detailed proposals shortly.

Finally, the Council adopted by unanimity various detailed amendments to the rules for granting aids of a structural nature. Among other things, these make it optional, rather than obligatory, for member states to operate schemes of aid for investment on farms.

Woodlands

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the ancient woodland inventory undertaken by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to establish a register of ancient woodland in the United Kingdom.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

An inventory of ancient woodland in Great Britain, excluding Northern Ireland, was produced by the Nature Conservancy Council between 1981 and 1991. Copies of this, arranged by county in England and Wales, and by district in Scotland, have been widely distributed to local authorities, the Forestry Commission, to conservation bodies and to landowners' representatives such as the Timber Growers Association.

Since 1991, responsibility for maintaining and revising the inventories has been passed to English Nature, the Countryside Council for Wales and Scottish Natural Heritage. These bodies update the information on particular sites in the light of new survey information, including information provided by the organisations and individuals to whom the inventory has gone. Assessment of and amendments to the inventory are thus a continuous process. Information about individual sites or areas is available on request.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney-General whether his departments organise receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

The Attorney-General: No such receptions are organised in the departments for which I am responsible.

EDUCATION

School Meals

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the average number of school meals claimed by (a) local education maintained primary schools, (b) local education authority maintained secondary schools, (c) grant-maintained primary schools and (d) grant-maintained secondary schools in each year since 1990.

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is as follows:

Average number of school meals taken by day pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in England on the census date in January: 1990 to 1994 (provisional)

	LEA Maintained Primary	Grant Maintained Primary	LEA Maintained [1]Secondary	Grant Maintained [1]Secondary
1990	96	–[2]	274	373
1991	94	–[2]	286	363
1992	95	117	300	384
1993	97	139	321	384
1994[3]	100	123	331	422

[1] excludes sixth form colleges which ceased to be classified as schools from 1 April 1993

[2] There were no grant-maintained primary schools in 1990 or 1991

[3] provisional

Cultural and Linguistic Exchanges

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what resources the DFE devotes to assist cultural and linguistic exchanges in (a) the primary sector and (b) the secondary sector;

(2) how many language or cultural exchange arrangements exist within the state sector of education.

Mr. Boswell: DFE grant to the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges in 1994–95 is £4·2 million. Of this, some £860,000 is targeted at the primary sector and some £1·8 million is targeted at the secondary sector. The rest is targeted at the further and higher education sectors.

The services offered include school linking, foreign language assistants, international in-service training for teachers and participation in multi-lateral—including EU—programmes. It is estimated that some 130,000 state-sector pupils participated in school exchanges in 1991–92, the latest year for which data are available.

The DFE also provides funding to the League for the Exchange of Commonwealth Teachers. It is estimated that in 1993–94 some £262,000 was spent in support of primary teacher exchange; and some £230,000 on secondary teacher exchange.

Higher and Further Education Fees

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average registration fee charged to home students by higher and further education colleges in each year since 1990.

Mr. Boswell: Information on the level of registration fees is not collected centrally.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in her Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There have been no occasions in the last year when the spouse of a Minister in the Department for Education has travelled abroad to accompany a Minister on public duties.

PE Teachers

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many physical education teachers were employed by local education authorities for each year since 1979.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is only available for 1977, 1984, 1988 and 1992 from the secondary school staffing surveys. The number of full-time teachers in all maintained secondary schools in England who were teaching physical education in each of these years was as follows:

1977	41·8 thousand
1984	37·9 thousand
1988	30·3 thousand
1992	24·4 thousand

The same surveys give information on the number of teachers with a post A-level qualification in physical education regardless of whether they were teaching it. The number of full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools with a physical education qualification in each year was:

1977	33·9 thousand
1984	36·4 thousand
1988	31·6 thousand
1992	30·3 thousand

In both the above cases the 1992 figures include teachers in grant maintained schools.

No figures are available giving the number of physical education teachers in primary schools or special schools. However, the 1987 primary school staffing survey showed that 12·8,000 teachers in maintained primary schools had a qualification in physical education.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether her Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Boswell: The Department for Education does not organise receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the number of school playing fields by local education authority for (a) 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1987, (d) 1992 and (e) the latest available date.

Mr. Robin Squire: No information is available for years before 1993. The latest available data will take a little time to assemble. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the capital receipts from the sale of school playing fields for each of the last six years by education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

TREASURY

Foster Carers

Ms Coffey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if allowances paid to local authority foster carers are non-taxable and are not regarded as income.

Sir George Young: To the extent that payments made to a foster carer do no more than meet the actual costs of caring for someone, no tax is payable. But if a profit arises on payments made to reward the foster carer's services in providing care, this profit is taxable.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if foster carers in receipt of boarding-out allowances and who do not receive an additional fee are not classified as self-employed.

Sir George Young: It will depend on whether or not an individual is self-employed, in particular the way in which the caring is organised. Whether a foster carer is self employed or not, to the extent that payments received do no more than meet the actual costs of caring, no tax will be payable. If a profit arises on payments made to reward the foster carer's services in providing care, this profit is taxable.

Where basic boarding allowances paid to foster carers do no more than re-imburse actual costs, no taxable profit arises.

This is reflected in National Foster Care Association guidelines, published in its leaflet NFC 2008, which has been agreed with the Inland Revenue.

Tobacco and Alcohol

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what extra measures have been taken to prevent the illegal importation of tobacco and alcohol since the opening of the single market; how much they have cost; and what is the value of the illegally imported tobacco and alcohol that has been seized and destroyed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise has allocated some 240 staff to single market excise work most of whom are specially trained excise verification officers—EVOs—whose remit is to detect and prosecute anyone attempting to defraud the Revenue in this way. The annual cost of an EVO is about £30,000. In the 20 months to August 1994 the revenue value of seized tobacco and alcohol was over £4 million. These goods either have been, or will be, destroyed.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate has been made of the volume of alcohol and tobacco which has been illegally imported since the opening of the single market; and what volume has been destroyed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is by definition difficult to form a reliable estimate of the total volume of smuggled goods. In the 20–month period to August 1994 Customs seized 4,298,927 cigarettes, 22,912 cigars, 25,517 kg of other tobacco and 1,188,449 litres of alcoholic drinks. All the goods sized either have been, or will, be destroyed subject to condemnation proceedings.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated loss to the Exchequer of the illegal importation of tobacco and alcohol from the continent in each year since the opening of the single market.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is notoriously difficult to calculate the true extent of smuggling. An assumed detection rate of one in 20, in the calendar year 1993 would suggest a revenue loss of the order of £35 million. The revenue value of seizures during the eight months of 1994 was £2·4 million.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions there have been, since the opening of the single market, for the illegal importation of alcohol and tobacco; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To 31 August 1994 Customs and Excise prosecuted 289 individuals for the illegal importation of alcohol and tobacco from other EU countries. The courts acquitted in two cases although one of these is the subject of an appeal by Customs.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the rate of excise duty, VAT or other tax on (a) wine, (b) spirits and (c) beer in each EU country; and what is the difference in each case for United Kingdom levels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The rates of excise duty and VAT on wine, spirits and beer in each EU country are shown in the following table.

	Spirits		Table Wine		Beer

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his Departments organise receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's departments do not organise receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) of 20 October, Official Report, column 417, if he will make a statement on the emergency ECOFIN meetings attended on 21 October with special reference to the United Kingdom's case against the EC Commission in the European Court of Justice regarding the proposal in respect of Italian milk quotas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 25 October.

Firearms

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the total seizures of illegal firearms for each port of entry for each month since January 1992.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs do not hold central statistics for seizures of weapons that can be broken down in this way. Such figures could be produced only at disproportionate cost. However, the table sets out the number of detections of illegal weapons by Customs and Excise per collection—regional command—for each quarter since 1 April 1993.

Press Officers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of press officers currently employed by his Departments who are normally based (a) in the Department in London (b) in the House and (c) at each other location.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The number of press officers currently employed by the Departments responsible to the Chancellor of the Exchequer is shown in the table.

All of these staff are based in London. None are normally based in the House. Agencies which are accountable to the Chancellor and which employ press officers are not included in the table.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Court Sentences

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of people sentenced in the courts received (a) a custodial sentence and (b) a non-custodial sentence in each month of 1993.

Mr. Maclean: The 1993 information, which is provisional, on sentencing at both the magistrates' court and the Crown court is given in the tables A to C. Data provided by the Lord Chancellor's Department for committals for trial at the Crown court is given in table D.

Mr. Maclean: The information available has been provided by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and is in the table; 1993 was the first year that HMIC collected information on incidents of domestic violence recorded by the police in England and Wales. The HMIC is in the process of collecting more reliable data.

Mr. Howard: The surveys carried out by the Home Department since 1 October 1992 which have included questions on public opinion are as listed. Not all the surveys were primarily focused on public opinion. The fee paid to successful contractors is not shown as this is regarded by the Central Statistical Office as a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Overstayers

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of the Russian Federation have overstayed on their visas in the last 12 months.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not available.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been made to the interception of communications tribunal challenging his Department's authorisation to intercept the communications of individuals and organisations during the period to date from 1985; how many of these applications have resulted in quashing of the relevant authorisation, destruction of copies of materials intercepted under the authorisations concerned and payment of financial compensation; on average, how long it has taken for the tribunal to consider and reach an outcome on individual applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The number of applications received by the tribunal in each year is as follows:

Year	Number of applications received
1986/87[1]	41
1987	32
1988	30
1989	49
1990	59
1991	58
1992	45
1993	41

[1] April 1986 to April 1987.

On no occasion has the tribunal concluded that there has been a contravention of sections 2 to 5 of the Interception of Communication Act 1985.

In 1993 the average time taken to complete a tribunal investigation was eight weeks.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Howard: No such receptions are organised.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to publish his conclusions on the consultation paper on wheel clamping on private land.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are considering what action to take in respect of wheel clamping on private land. The consultation paper referred to produced much useful information from interested parties. It did not, however produce any consensus on how to ensure that any measure introduced to prevent or deter irresponsible and heavy-handed wheel clamping on private land does not prevent sensible measures from being taken to control genuine parking problems. We will make our conclusions known as soon as possible.

Merseyside Police Authority

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the proposed changes in funding for policing for the Merseyside police authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have listened very carefully to the many concerns which have been expressed from Merseyside and elsewhere about the version of the new police funding formula which was exemplified in September. We are now revising the formula to ensure the capacity of police authorities to maintain existing levels of service.

Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill (Demonstration)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning the events on 9 October during and after the march and rally against the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Maclean: The Commissioner has provided my right hon. and learned Friend with details of the disorder which occurred.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Islington, North of 10 October requesting an inquiry into the events of 9 October after the march and rally against the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend will be replying to the hon. Member's letter shortly.

Firearms

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are (a) the total number of firearms certificates current in London, (b) the number issued in the past year in London and (c) the number of prosecutions made in the past year in London for illegal possession of firearms.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested at (a) and (b) is published in Home Office statistical bulletin 'Firearm Certificate Statistics, England and Wales 1993' (issue 22/94), table 2, a copy of which can be found in the Library.

One hundred and eight persons were proceeded against in the area covered by the Metropolitan and City of London police forces for the offence of possessing firearms or ammunition without a licence in 1993.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the licensing of replica guns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Any imitation firearm which can be readily converted to fire live ammunition is subject to stringent licensing control. But licensing other imitation firearms would be neither feasible nor effective in combatting misuse.

The Firearms (Amendment) Act 1994 has made it an offence to possess an imitation firearm with intent to cause fear of unlawful violence. The possession of an imitation firearm in the commission of an indictable offence carries a maximum sentence of life imprisonment.

Charities Act 1992

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make any order or regulations under (a) section 38 and (b) section 39 of the Charities Act 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The deregulation task force on charities and voluntary organisations recommended, among many proposed changes to the law and regulations affecting charities, that the powers in sections 70 and 71 of the Charities Act 1993—formerly sections 38 and 39 of the 1992 Act—be used to amend the investment powers of charity trustees. The position remains, as indicated in the task force's report, that this is under review: first priority is being given to bringing into force new provisions in part II of the 1992 Act—control of fund-raising—and part VI of the 1993 Act—charity accounts, reports and returns.

Gerry Adams

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to lift the exclusion order in respect of Gerry Adams made under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts.

Mr. Howard: The exclusion order against Mr. Adams was revoked on 21 October.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Howard: Since 28 October 1993, there have been two occasions when the spouse of a Home Office Minister has accompanied the Minister on public duties overseas. The total cost to public funds was £8,317.

On both occasions the necessary approval was sought in advance of the visit and full official programmes drawn up by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, concentrating on charity work relating to Home Office interests, particularly drugs, were followed.

There was one occasion when a spouse accompanied a Home Office Minister at own cost.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of full-time equivalent section 11 posts held for each education authority in England and Wales for the current financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The table lists all education authorities in England and Wales with projects approved for funding under section 11, including those which, since 1 April 1994, have received such finding from the Department of the Environment's single regeneration budget.

Financial Times (Injunction)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the cost of the recent injunction obtained by him on the Financial Times was borne on public funds.

Mr. Howard: No

Open Government

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the review of the blanket retention of civil and home defence records announced in the White Paper on open government has been completed.

Mr. Howard: The review of the blanket retention of civil and home defence records has been completed. I am pleased to announce that with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, it has been decided not to renew the blanket provision. This is in line with the open government initiatives introduced by the Government where the emphasis is on release rather than retention of records.

Government Departments which hold records relating to civil and home defence will now review them individually on the basis of guidance provided jointly by my Department and the Cabinet Office, with a view to releasing those which are no longer regarded as sensitive.

Prison Assaults

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of assaults (a) by prisoners on prisoners, (b) by prisoners on staff and (c) other assaults which took place in each prison in England and Wales each month of 1992 and 1993;

(2) if he will list the number of assaults (a) by prisoners on prisoners and (b) by prisoners on staff, in each prison in England and Wales for each month of 1994 to the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 26 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your two recent Questions asking for the number of assaults by prisoners on other prisoners and on staff and others in each prison in England and Wales for each month of 1992, 1993 and of 1994 to the latest available date.

The enclosed tables give the numbers of assaults proved at adjudication under the prison discipline system for January 1992 to September 1994. In view of their bulk, I have arranged for them to be placed in the Library of the House rather than printed in the Official Report. Information on the small number of assaults other than on staff or prisoners is included with assaults on staff in the tables; it is published separately on an annual basis by establishment in "Statistics of offences against prison discipline and punishments, England and Wales" (Cm 2411 for 1992 and Cm 2664 for 1993), copies of which are in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cuba

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the recent visit of the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology to Cuba.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I visited Cuba between 12 and 14 September 1994, as the guest of the Cuban Minister for Foreign Trade, Senor Ricardo Cabrisas. It was the first visit to Cuba by a British Minister since 1975. I was accompanied by a 15-strong team of business men and women and by the chairman and director of the Department's Caribbean trade advisory group—CARITAG. We were warmly received and had productive meetings with key Cuban Ministers and with President Castro.

Following the ending of preferential trade arrangements with the former Soviet Union, Cuba has begun to reform its economy along more market-oriented lines. The Cuban Government described this process as irreversible and the intention is to take it forward.

On this basis, United Kingdom industry can respond more positively to Cuba's welcome of trade, investment and advice from Britain. It recognises its outstanding debt as an impediment to trade on normal commercial terms. The business group and I identified opportunities for British business in the provision of advice on the management of a market economy and in longer-term joint ventures. Commercial negotiations during our visit were advanced in transport, agri-business, construction, tourism and financial services.

On 14 September, I initialled a bilateral investment promotion and protection agreement which will give further confidence to investors. Cuba is moving towards a more open trading relationship with developed market economies and this should encourage domestic reform. Subject to this process being continued and developed, I have asked CARITAG to make proposals for a private-sector-led group to co-ordinate discussion and to progress the many specific commercial and related issues raised during my visit.

Indonesia

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his criteria for proscribing trade on the basis of a country's human rights record; and if he will make a statement on their application to Indonesia.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government subscribe to the common criteria for arms transfers agreed with EU partners at Luxembourg in 1991 and at Lisbon in 1992, and the principles governing arms transfers agreed by the forum for security co-operation of the Conference for Security and Co-operation in Europe in November 1993. These include consideration of human rights.

No prohibition on trade has been introduced in respect of Indonesia. Export licences are required for some goods and applications are considered on a case by case basis taking into account the above criteria as appropriate.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about recent exports of British armaments to Indonesia.

Mr. Ian Taylor: It is not normal practice to divulge details of export licences, unless the requirements of confidentiality are outweighed by public interest considerations.

In this case, such considerations justify disclosing that to date in 1994 we have issued 26 export licences for goods in schedule 1, group 1 part III of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994—the military list. The total value of these goods licensed for export is £14·69 million. Licences are valid for two years.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that the human rights record of the Indonesian Government are taken into account when deciding whether to grant an export licence for the export of tanks to Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The human rights record of a recipient country is one of a number of factors taken into account during the consideration of an application for an export licence for military and paramilitary equipment.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff are employed by his Department; and what proportion of them are employed in each of the standard regions.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The total number of permanent staff employed by my Department on 1 October was 10,594—part-time staff are counted as half. The proportion employed in each standard region is shown in the following table:

Proportion by standard region	Percentage of total
Northern Ireland	0·05
Scotland	4·05
Wales	17·62
North	2·19
North West	3·29
Yorkshire and Humberside	2·49

Fuel Cell Advisory Panel

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the fuel cell advisory panel in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The fuel cell advisory panel was established in April 1992 and has met on a total of eight occasions, with three meetings in 1992–93 and four in 1993–94. Secretarial support is provided by the energy technology support unit—ETSU—which manages my Department's advanced fuel cell research and development programme, on which the panel advises. This advice, which includes the assessment of individual proposals for funding, is given through discussion at the panel's meetings, the minutes of which are not published for reasons of commercial confidentiality. As an advisory body the panel does not disburse funds itself and membership is unpaid.

The administrative costs of the panel are met from the programme management budget and published each year in a report prepared by the Cabinet Office. A copy of the latest edition, "Public Bodies 1993", is available in the Library of the House. DTI expenditure on projects within the programme amounted to £0·36 million in 1992–93 and £0·83 million in 1993–94. The budget for 1994–95 is £1 million.

The total value of projects supported by the programme to date is £14·7 million, for a DTI contribution, including future commitments, of £2·6 million. Two technical strategies, for solid polymer and solid oxide fuel cells, prepared by ETSU and endorsed by the panel, were published by ETSU this summer and I have placed copies in the Library of the House. A wide range of information on projects within the programme is also published by ETSU.

Committees

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the Advisory Committee for Arbitration Law in each of the last three years.

Mr. Heseltine: The departmental advisory committee on arbitration law has met in full once a year in each of the last three years. The Committee has no dedicated secretarial or advisory staff nor does it have an allocated budget or expenditure functions. Secretarial support is provided by staff in my Department. My Department in co-operation with the committee published a consultation document on a draft Arbitration Bill in February 1994. No other submissions have been published in the last three years.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the Aviation committee in each of the last three years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Aviation committee will meet four times this year and met three times in each of the past two years. Secretarial and administration functions are provided by the Department and cost approximately £30,000 per annum. There is no separate budget. The advisory arrangements are that the committee may communicate its advice during meetings to officials, who attend throughout, or in writing or by making presentations to Ministers. The subjects of such advice were as follows:

1992: The Control Technology Programme
The National Strategic Technology Acquisition Plan (NSTAP)

1993: NSTAP: Report to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry Science, Technology and Engineering White Paper: relationship with NSTAP

1994: Technology Co-ordinators: Implementation of NSTAP
An Industry Strategy
The Hercules Replacement

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The secretariat of the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property is provided by the Intellectual Property Policy Directorate—IPPD—of the Patent Office. Expenditure on this task is not budgeted separately from IPPD's other policy work. The committee's advice is sought by correspondence and at meetings. The meetings held in the last three years are as follows:

Financial Year	Number of Meetings
1991–92	3
1992–93	3

Cable TV

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sanctions can be taken against cable operators who fail to adhere to the proposed guidelines designed to minimise damage to tree roots; and what body is to be responsible for administering such sanctions.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The guidelines on minimising damage to street trees now agreed by the national joint utilities group, the arboricultural industry and the Cable Communications Association, are voluntary. Like other operators of underground services, the cable industry is committed to ensuring that its contractors follow best practice, including the need to hand-dig around the roots of trees. The effectiveness of the guidelines will be reviewed after they have been in operation for six months. We welcome the increased efforts of the Cable Communications Association to meet public concerns about safety of trees.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each, the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Surveys commissioned by my Department which included questions concerning public opinion since October 1992 are given in the table. No such surveys were conducted by DTI agencies during this period. Information on the fee paid cannot be disclosed due to commercial confidentiality considerations.

Post Office

Dr. Marek: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Crown post offices have been closed in the last 15 years; which have been transferred from one premises to another; and what proposals the Post Office has for further closures or relocations.

Mr. Eggar: I understand from the Post Office that between March 1979 and March 1994 the number of Crown post offices has been reduced from 1,580 to 800. This is not primarily the result of office closures; of this reduction, 675 have been converted to franchise or agency offices either in the same premises or in suitable premises nearby. Such converted offices continue to offer the full range of services available at Crown offices, and in many cases offer longer opening hours and improved access. Of the remaining 105, a number have not involved closure but the merger of two neighbouring Crown offices, again continuing to provide the full range of services.

The Post Office has no plans at present to close or merge any further Crown offices. It does, however, intend to continue the Crown conversion programme, though decisions on such conversions are taken at regional management level. Where a Crown office is considered for conversion, a consultation process is undertaken with the local Member of Parliament and representative local bodies.

The records of individual Crown office closures and mergers since 1979 are not held centrally by the Post Office and collecting this information would entail disproportionate cost.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 239, what percentage of responses were in favour of (a) granting the Post Office freedoms within the public sector, (b) a 100 per cent. share sale and (c) joint ownership by Government, public and employees with the Government selling 51 per cent. of shares.

Mr. Eggar: As I indicated in my answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 239, we will make public the results of the consultation at the appropriate point.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of staff and their total salary cost employed at the Post Office headquarters for each year since 1987.

Mr. Eggar: I understand from the Post Office that the information requested is available only from 1990–91 and is as follows:

Year	Headquarters Staff Numbers	Labour Costs (inc NI Contributions) £ million
1990–91	379	8·9
1991–92	388	9·9
1992–93	359	9·3
1993–94	354	9·9

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were employed as consultants to the Post Office; and what was their total cost in each year since 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The employment of consultants is an operational matter for the Post Office.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much corporation tax was paid by the Post Office for each year since 1979 at current prices.

Mr. Eggar: Corporation tax paid by the Post Office in each year since 1979, expressed in September 1994 prices was as follows:

Year	£ million
1979–80	1
1980–81	nil
1981–82	nil
1982–83	nil
1983–84	2
1984–85	3
1985–86	2
1986–87	3
1987–88	59
1988–89	40
1989–90	32
1990–91	78
1991–92	72
1992–93	87
1993–94	83

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many submissions he received on his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services", and if he will list those who responded.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: At the end of the consultation period we had received some 13,400 responses to the Green Paper. It is for respondents to make public the views they expressed if they choose to do so.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many of the submissions he received on his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services", were in favour of the Government's favoured option; and how many were against;

(2) how many members of the public responded to his Green Paper, "The Future of Postal Services", and how many of them were in favour of breaking up and privatising the Post Office.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 October 1994]: A wide variety of views were expressed. We will make public the results of the consultation at the appropriate point.

Electricity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contribution his Department is making to the International Atomic Energy Agency's DECADES project on the comparative assessment of the environmental aspects, economic competitiveness and technical reliability of different electricity generating systems.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The DECADES project, part of the global response to energy and environmental concerns that arose in the 1990s, is being carried out by the IAEA and eight other organisations and works on databases and methodologies for comparative assessment of different energy sources for electricity.

Results are scheduled for presentation in September 1995 at an international symposium in Vienna on electricity, health and the environment.

The International Atomic Energy Agency share of the project is mainly funded from the regular budget to which the United kingdom contributes its share in full, as we do also with the other organisations involved in the project. It would be uneconomic to enumerate the exact contribution attributable to the Uuited Kingdom amongst the nine organisations involved. The DTI has also co-ordinated the attendance of experts from industry and government from the United Kingdom at meetings being held in the framework of the project.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the capacity of each of the coal-fired power stations privatised under National Power and PowerGen.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The capacity of each of National Power's and PowerGen's coal-fired stations at privatisation is set out on pages 96 and 168 of the prospectus, published on 22 February 1991, setting out the Government's offer for sale of National Power and PowerGen shares. I am arranging for a copy of the prospectus to be made available in the Library of the House.

Taiwan

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what efforts his Department is making to improve Britain's trade with Taiwan.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department attaches importance to commercial links between the United Kingdom and Taiwan. The Taiwanese market is now treated in the same way as our other target markets. Taiwan has a dedicated market team in my Department supported by export promoters seconded from industry. Their work is being supported by additional resources allocated to the British trade and cultural office in Taipei.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Company Returns

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answers of 20 October, Official Report, column 287, on how many occasions staff of the Registrar of Companies have notified his office in relation to companies in default on their annual returns during the past 12 months or other statistically convenient period.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 25 October 1994]: Records are not kept in a way which permits a definite answer, but four such cases have been identified since 1 January 1994 involving defaults on annual accounts, annual returns, or a combination of both.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Any contracting out of functions of official receivers would be dependent on the passage of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill and on the procedures set out in it including consultation with official receivers as statutory office holders and obtaining an affirmative order of both Houses.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cases were referred by Insolvency Service practitioners to the official receiver for investigation in each of the last three financial years.

WALES

A465

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the transport directorate of the European Commission concerning the proposed addition of the A465 to the Trans-European road network.

Mr. Redwood: I have asked officials to pursue this. Revised proposals from the Commission show the A465 on the trans-European road network.

Mr. Redwood: The consultants, final report on the A55 ecological and environmental study is due to be submitted to the Welsh Office at the end of January 1995.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give figures based on current performance for the number of health service staff he expects will see earnings (a) fall and (b) rise as a result of the introduction of relating pay to performances.

Mr. Richards: The proposals made to staff sides and the professions who represent groups covered by NHS review bodies and included in the pay offer to staff sides of non-review body groups would strengthen the links between rewards and performance of their local organisation. Such schemes would be locally determined and depend on the achievement of local objectives for the delivery of high quality services. I would expect average pay to continue to rise.

A470

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the statutory requirements in connection with the improvement of the A470 Dolwyddel to Blaenau Ffestiniog road will be complete; when it is expected that works will commence; if the work will be in stages; how long the whole project will take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The programming of the major schemes for the improvement of the A470 in the Lledr valley between Betws-y-Coed and Blaenau Ffestiniog is set out in "Roads in Wales–1994 Review". The first of these schemes, that for the section between Cancoed to Minffordd, has recently been the subject of a local public inquiry. Depending on the outcome of that inquiry, work is expected to start on the scheme in 1995, subject to the availability of finance, and will take approximately 18 months.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to allow Housing for Wales equivalent power to implement a scheme of GRO—grants for rent and ownership—grants for individual housing projects as currently operated and administered by Scottish Homes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are at present no plans to introduce GRO grants in Wales. I continue to keep under review the Scottish experience in this field.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each, the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is as follows. In addition to the items listed, the Welsh Office consults interested groups and individuals from time to time on a wide range of issues. Executive NDPBs in Wales have not been included in the data provided. The total cost of these surveys was approximately £56,000. The cost of individual contracts is confidential.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employers in each TEC area in Wales have been given the investors in people award; how many have made a commitment to meeting the standard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The number of businesses in each Welsh TEC area making commitments to investors in people and those which have already received the award is as follows:

Mid Glamorgan	63	18
North East Wales	25	5
North West Wales	33	6
South Glamorgan	47	10
West Wales	85	17
Wales	314	69

The Welsh Office is committed to improving the competitiveness of businesses in Wales. Training and development plays a key part in this process by ensuring the availability of the skills and expertise necessary to achieve business objectives. Investors in people aims to encourage and recognise effective training. The Welsh Office promotes the commitment to, and achievement of, the IIP award through the seven Welsh training and enterprise councils.

(2) how many entrants into the Tir Cymen pilot schemes there were in 1992–93; and how many applied unsuccessfully;

(3) what was the budget allocated for the Tir Cymen pilot schemes in 1992–93 and 1993–94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is as follows:

1992–93	201 (Unsuccessful—11)
1993–94	187 (Unsuccessful—14)

(2) what is the budget allocated by the Welsh Office for juvenile drug use education in the current year.

Mr. Richards: Drug prevention work is undertaken by a number of agencies from both the statutory and voluntary sectors, which receive funds from various sources. In 1992–93 the Welsh Office made available some £200,000 to help fund activities concerned with the prevention of drug misuse. The budget for 1994–95 is over £350,000. Funding is also available to local education authorities for health education, including drugs, under the grants for education support and training programme.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with learning disabilities are resident in long-stay hospitals; and if he will list the long-stay learning disability hospitals still operating.

Mr. Richards: In June 1994 information from district health authorities indicated that around 750 persons with learning disabilities were resident in long-stay hospitals in Wales.

The long-stay learning disability hospitals in Wales are listed as follows:

Juvenile Drug Prevention

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives the Welsh Office is pursuing to combat juvenile drug abuse in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Office was fully involved with the organisation and funding of European drug prevention week in Wales. The initiative, which lasted from 15 to 22 October, targeted young people. A variety of local events and a national sixth form conference were supported by the Welsh Office.

During the week my right hon. Friend announced the setting up of a new unit to tackle drug and alcohol misuse. The development of effective prevention programmes aimed at young people will be one of the main tasks of the unit.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to control the number of sheep scab cases in Wales; and what plans he now has to make sheep scab a fully notifiable disease.

Mr. Redwood: Sheep scab is a disease which can be controlled by individual farmers, who are aware of the preventive measures and procedures needed to deal with it. The Government have no plans to re-introduce sheep scab controls.

We are aware of the concerns within the industry about the number of sheep affected by scab. A comprehensive publicity campaign is being carried out this autumn aimed at all sheep farmers, encouraging treatment where scab is suspected. It will help owners recognise the disease and emphasise to farmers their welfare responsibilities. We are also stepping up our efforts to ensure that unfit animals are not presented for sale by increasing the official veterinary presence at markets. Animals suffering from scab will be removed from sale at markets and owners will face the possibility of prosecution.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Redwood: None. There have been no official overseas visits by any wife of a Minister in the Welsh Office, either at public expense or her own expense.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farmers in Wales have not yet received payment of their advance payments with respect to the 1994 sheep annual premium scheme.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 October 1994]: Of the 16,816 eligible claims received, around 13·8 per cent. remain to be paid. The majority of these involve queries or quota problems which will have to be resolved before payments are made.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 251, whether the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency discussed with the board members of the agency his intentions to take up a directorship of Development Securities plc; and if the discussion was minuted as recommended in paragraph 35 of the Caines report mentioned in his statement of 19 October 1993, Official Report, column 147.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 October 1994]: My understanding is that the chairman declared his interest at a WDA board meeting and this was minuted.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 251, and with reference to the recommendations contained in paragraph 35 of the Caines report of October 1993, what proposals he has to strengthen the guidelines for directors of the Welsh Development Agency regarding the proposed directorships of property companies with property interests in Wales and other companies with possible conflict of interest implications with the work of the agency.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The rules on conflict of interest are already clear. The code of best practice for board members of public bodies, prepared by HM Treasury was issued to the agency in July of this year by my Department.

Welsh Language

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Royal Society of Arts and City and Guilds in relation to preparation of courses and examination leading to general national vocational qualifications through the medium of Welsh; and when he expects to conclude these discussions.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The position is as stated in my hon. Friend's letter to the hon. Member on 20 September 1994. Following negotiations between my officials and the GNVQ awarding bodies, the RSA and City and Guilds of London Institute have now agreed to provide GNVQ unit tests through the medium of Welsh to meet demand from schools and colleges in Wales during the 1994–95 academic year. The two awarding bodies will carry out pilots to test the systems and the quality of the qualifications.

Officials expect to be in a position to finalise contracts with the two awarding bodies within the next few weeks.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of chief executives of national health service trusts in each of the last four years have been paid on a performance-related pay basis.

Mr. Moss: The pay of NHS trusts chief executive is a matter for individual trusts to determine. Details are not held centrally but should be published in trusts' annual reports. Guidance on that will be issued shortly.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what specific analysis his Department has conducted on the cost and efficiency of introducing performance-related pay to clinical grades in the national health service.

Mr. Moss: Implementation of local pay arrangements is for health and social services trusts to determine taking into account the individual health care objectives contained in their agreed business plans. The assessment of the cost and efficiency of schemes is also for local determination.

Parades, South Down

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many parades were held in the constituency of South Down from 1 April to 30 September inclusive; and what were the locations.

Parade Statistics are recorded by RUC sub-divisional areas, which do not generally coincide with constituency boundaries. Whilst every effort has been made to correlate information from the relevant boundary maps, it is possible that some 'borderline' cases may have been wrongly included or omitted.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the estimated cost of policing parades in the constituency of South Down from 1 April to 30 September.

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

IRA Ceasefire

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many attacks on individuals have taken place in Northern Ireland since the start of the IRA ceasefire which have been classified as punishment attacks by a paramilitary organisation.

Sir John Wheeler: The available information is for a period 1 September to 23 October 1994 and is as follows:

Punishment Attacks

	Number of Casualties
	Loyalist	Republican	Total
Punishment Assaults	3	11	14
Punishment Shootings	14	—	14
			[2]28

Note:

These punishment attacks have not necessarily been claimed by a paramilitary organisation. Attribution has been decided based mainly on knowledge.

[2] With the exception of one punishment shooting, all of these attacks took place prior to the loyalist ceasefire.

Learning Disability Hospitals

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people with learning disabilities are resident in long-stay hospitals; and if he will list the long-stay learning disability hospitals still operating.

Mr. Moss: The number of people with a mental handicap resident in long-stay hospitals in Northern Ireland was 839 at 17 February 1994, including 64 patients in long-stay psychiatric hospitals.

The long-stay mental handicap hospitals which are currently operating are listed below:

Muckamore Abbey
Longstone
Tower Hill
Stradreagh

School Playing Fields

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the capital receipts from the sale of school playing fields for each of the last six years by education authority.

Mr. Ancram: There has been one such sale within the last six years. In 1991, £57,000 was received by the Belfast education and library board in respect of the sale of 8 acres of surplus school playing fields. The land was sold to a private rugby club and continues to be used as playing fields.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of school playing fields by local education authority for (a) 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1987, (d) 1992 and (e) the latest available date.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, information compiled in 1989, shows that at that time there were 611 grass pitches and 950 artificial games areas for all schools in Northern Ireland.

PE Teachers

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many physical education teachers were employed by local education authorities in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ancram: Information is available only for 1989, when there were an estimated 860 physical education teachers in secondary schools in Northern Ireland.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Sir John Wheeler: To date, no Northern Ireland Department has organised a reception for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time. However, Baroness Denton, as Minister with responsibility for women's issues in Northern Ireland, recently held a reception to encourage women in public appointment. My right hon. and learned Friend and I were in attendance and those present included both women who hold public appointments and those who did not but might be encouraged to consider putting themselves forward. Senior departmental officials involved in the public appointments process were also present. Some 97 people attended and the cost of the reception was £920.

Public Information

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last three years to (a) produce public information in alternative formats for visually impaired people and (b) publicise the availability of accessible information among visually impaired people.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments have spent the following amounts of money in each of the last three years to produce public information in alternative format for visually impaired people:

1991–92– £2,742

As the Royal National Institute for the Blind produces and provides the available information free of charge, the amount spent in each of the last three years on publicising the availability of accessible information amongst visually impaired people has been negligible.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate which Departmental publications are currently available (a) in Braille, (b) in large print and (c) on tape; and if he will indicate what efforts have been made by his Department to inform visually impaired people about the availability of publications in alternative formats to normal print.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments currently have the following publications available in:

(a) Braille

Water Quality Register Leaflet
Water Quality Standards Leaflets
Emergencies and Complaints on Water Quality Leaflet
Leaflets and publications relating to the marketing and promotion of training and employment services.

The Northern Ireland Civil Service Code of Practice on the Employment of People with Disabilities

(b) Large Print

Water Quality Register Leaflet

Leaflets and publications relating to the marketing and promotion of training and employment services.
The Northern Ireland Charter for the Child Support Agency "For Parents Who Live Apart" Leaflet

The equal opportunities officer in the Department of Finance and Personnel is in a position to inform visually impaired staff of the availability of the NICS code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities.

Departments work closely with the Royal National Institute for the Blind to help promote services and programmes which are available.

Hualon Corporation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now make it his policy to suspend, pending the outcome of an investigation by the Public Accounts Committee, the proposed grant to the Hualon Corporation in connection with the development of new textile facilities in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 October 1994]: I am not aware of any such plans by the Public Accounts Committee and in light of the information currently before me I can see no justification in suspending progress of the Hualon project.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Philip Layton

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the charges laid against Mr. Philip Layton of the Royal Hong Kong police at his trial; what was the outcome of the trial; how much compensation has been paid to Mr. Layton following the trial verdict; what were the surveillance duties of Mr. Layton in relation to arms traffic in Hong Kong; and whether those duties extended to the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Goodlad: Philip Layton was charged with soliciting an advantage from John Edward Picken, and with offering an advantage to Rodney John Starling, a chief inspector of police, in exchange for the future supply of confidential information. He was acquitted of these charges. He did not receive any compensation but, following a court order that he be awarded his costs, he was paid HK$3,416,601.

Mr. Layton did not have any duties in relation to arms traffic in Hong Kong.

Radioactive Nitric Acid

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the trade or atomic energy counsellor at the British embassy in Washington has given British Nuclear Fuels plc in negotiating with the United States Energy Department for the import of radioactive nitric acid from Hanford to Sellafield.

Mr. Goodlad: Contractual negotiations for the proposed import of nitric acid to Sellafield are a matter for the contracting parties, British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United States Department of Energy. In keeping with the Government's normal policy and practice of supporting British companies pursuing commercial opportunities overseas, the British embassy in Washington has provided information, advice and assistance to British Nuclear Fuels plc as necessary.

Human Rights

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking, alone and in concert with the European Union, to press for the implementation of the human rights accord signed on 29 March, and for the deployment of the United Nations verification mission mandated by the human rights accord.

Mr. David Davis: We and our EU partners have made clear our intention to play a full part in supporting the peace process in Guatemala. We hope that the deployment of the United Nation human rights verification mission will encourage both sides to abide by the conditions of the human rights accord and to sign an overall peace agreement.

Armenia

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the type of nuclear reactors built for electric power production in Armenia; and when the power station is likely to be commissioned.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Armenia's only nuclear power plant is at Medzamor, 25 km south of Yerevan. The plant consists of two Soviet-built VVER 440 pressurised water reactors. Both reactors were shut down in early 1989 as a precaution following the Armenian earthquake but the Armenian Government are aiming, with Russian assistance, to bring unit 2 back into service as soon as possible, with unit 1 to follow. The Armenian Government intend to operate Medzamor for approximately seven of its remaining 20 years' design life, and in the meantime to bring alternative generating capacity on stream.

Hebron

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent exclusion of the British consul from the Ibrahimi mosque in Hebron.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Ibrahimi mosque was closed to all after the massacre in February. A representative from the British consulate-general in Jerusalem was among a group of people who were unable to enter the plateau near the mosque on 25 August 1994 because of the security measures.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which nations are represented in the United Nations peacekeeping force in Rwanda; and in what numbers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As at 30 September, the United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda—UNAMIR—consisted of troops, police and military observers—from Australia, 313; Austria, 16; Bangladesh, 52; Canada, 388; Chad, 130; Congo, 40; Ethiopia, 804; Fiji, one; Ghana, 899; Guinea, 15; Guinea Bissau, 39; Kenya, six; Malawi, 177; Mali, 39; Niger, 43; Nigeria, 271; Poland, three; Russian Federation, 15; Senegal, 241; Slovak Republic, seven; Tunisia, 40; United Kingdom, 595; Uruguay, 27; Zambia, 111; and Zimbabwe, 26.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current British contribution to peacekeeping forces in Rwanda.

It consists of: an equipment support workshop—182; an engineer squadron—144; a field ambulance—156; a signals detachment—29; a guard platoon—44; and 20 support personnel.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Nations forces in Rwanda are now fully assembled and deployed with full logistic support.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Assistance Mission for Rwanda is fully deployed with the exception of one battalion of troops from Zambia and one battalion of troops from India. Logistic support for the mission is currently provided by a number of contingents, including the British. A contract between the United Nations and the Brown and Root company to provide logistic support has not yet been finalised.

Former Soviet Union

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the presence of Russian forces in Moldova, Georgia and Armenia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy is that Russian troops should be stationed in another former Soviet Union country only with the consent of that country's Government, and in accordance with the provisions of the conventional armed forces in Europe treaty.

We welcome the signature of an agreement between the Moldovan and Russian Governments which establishes a timetable for the withdrawal of the Russian 14th army. The Russian peacekeeping troops in Moldova, which are separate from the 14th Army, are present with the consent of the Moldovan Government.

In Georgia and Armenia, Russian troops are also present with the consent of the host Government.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the conditions for peacekeeping under the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe auspices in the Caucasus.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Arrangements to consolidate and monitor the ceasefire in Nagorno-Karabakh, including the mandate of any peacekeeping force, and move on to negotiations for a peaceful settlement, are being discussed within the CSCE. We attach considerable importance to the principles on peacekeeping agreed by CSCE Foreign Ministers at their meeting in Rome in December 1993.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what hostage taking there has recently been of United Nations personnel in Liberia; what has been the outcome; and what representations there have been about this.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In early September, 43 United Nations military observers were detained by soldiers of the National Patriotic Front of Liberia. The President of the Security Council issued a statement on 13 September condemning the detention of the observers and demanding their release. By 20 September all had been freed.

Iran

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Iran's continued abuses of human rights, and its policy of terrorism and fundamentalism; and what steps Her Majesty's Government will take concerning Iranian activities at home and abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We remain deeply concerned at Iran's human rights record and at continuing reports of its support for terrorism. We are determined to maintain pressure on Iran to improve its behaviour in these areas, both bilaterally and through the European Union, the United Nations and the G7.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the CSCE review conference in Budapest.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe—CSCE—Review Conference began on 10 October in Budapest and will end on 2 December. It will be followed by a CSCE summit on 5 to 6 December. It is our objective to develop the CSCE as the European instrument of choice in early warning, conflict prevention and resolution, especially of disputes affecting minorities. We are working for decisions at the summit which will promote security and stability in the CSCE area and strengthen co-operation between all participating states.

European Union

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of enlarging the European Union.

Mr. David Davis: A treaty of accession to the European Union was signed with four European Free Trade Association states on 24 June this year. The people of Austria and Finland have already voted in favour of joining: provided that referendums in Sweden—13 November—and Norway—28 November—are also positive, and that remaining parliamentary procedures in those countries are satisfactorily completed, all four will accede on 1 January 1995. On further EU enlargement, the Copenhagen European Council—1 June 1993—agreed that the associated countries of central and eastern Europe that so wished will join as soon as they are able to assume the obligations of membership by satisfying the economic and political conditions required. The Corfu European Council—1 June 1994—agreed that the next phase of enlargement will involve Cyprus and Malta.

Iraq

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his Security Council counterparts on the extent to which a further UN resolution would be required to authorise the use of force against Iraqi troops.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had close and regular consultations on Iraq with his French, American and Russian colleagues over the past fortnight. The extent to which a further UN Security Council resolution would be required to authorise the use of force against Iraqi troops would depend on the circumstances at the time.

Romania

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Romanian authorities about child adoption procedures.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. learned Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the question of the operation of the Anglo-Romanian adoption agreement with the Romanian authorities in Bucharest in September. The Department of Health, which administers the agreement, is concerned about delays in processing applications under the terms of the agreement. We will continue to press for the proper operation of the agreement and the speedy resolution of cases.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO does not organise receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time.

Departmental Documents

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of all documents, letters or accounts he has signed which are written in a language he does not understand.

Mr. Hurd: The only documents that fall into this category are treaties, true and exact English language texts of which are always signed at the same time.

Copies of all treaties entered into by the United Kingdom are published as command papers in the treaty series and laid before both Houses.

Antartic Treaty

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to be able to announce a decision on the siting of the secretariat for the Antarctic treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: Discussions continue among treaty consultative parties about the siting of the Antartic treaty secretariat. The position remains unchanged from that stated in the answer given by the then Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 27 June 1994, Official Report, column 410.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated number of people who find permanent work as a result of the training enterprise councils.

Mr. Paice: Information is not available about the full impact of training and enterprise councils in helping people find permanent work. However, in England and Wales, 52 per cent. of those leaving youth training and 35 per cent. of those leaving training for work between April and December 1993 were in employment six months after finishing training.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons were trained by TECs in 1993–94.

Mr. Paice: During 1993–94, there were 566,100 starts on youth training and training for work in England and Wales. At the latest date for which information is available, July 1994, there were 357,000 people in training on these programmes.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the outturn expenditure given to each TEC in England in 1992–93 at 1993–94 prices; and what is the budget for each TEC in 1993–94 in total and broken down in the same way as given in the written answer of 18 February 1993, Official Report, column 341.

Mr. Paice: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which TECs are using adult training credits within their training for work provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: The following English training and enterprise councils are understood to be using a form of adult training credit within their training for work provision:

South and East Cheshire TEC;
Hertfordshire TEC;
Bedfordshire TEC;
Milton Keynes TEC;
Cambridgeshire TEC.

Earnings

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the increase in earnings in cash and real terms for each socio-economic group since 1987.

Mr. Oppenheim: The closest available information to that requested is for occupations, which is published in tables 8, 9 and x3 of part A of the "New Earnings Survey" for each of the years.

The information on the retail prices index—all items—at April, to convert figures to 1994 prices, is published in table 6.4 of the Employment Gazette and in table 26 of the "Annual Supplement Economic Trends" for April of earlier years.

National Union of Teachers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of subscriptions paid to the NUT for each year since 1985.

Mr. Oppenheim: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that the level of full member subscription to the National Union of Teachers is not specified in the latest NUT rule book submitted to him with the union's annual return for the year ended 31 December 1993.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many of the NUT's members currently employed as a teacher are practising the profession;

(2) If it is possible for members of the NUT to pay lumps sums to cover a number of years' membership.

Mr. Oppenheim: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that this information is not available from records held by him. Nor is any such information held by the Department.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 27 June, Official Report, columns 450-51, to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, how many members of the National Union of Teachers actually paid subscriptions for each year since 1985.

Mr. Oppenheim: I understand from the certification officer, an independent statutory officer, that the number of contributing members shown on the annual returns for the National Union of Teachers submitted to him during the period in question is shown in the following table:

	Number
1985	225,784
1986	201,444
1987	195,126
1988	189,043
1989	183,042
1990	181,557
1991	178,112
1992	176,022
1993	182,664

Job Clubs

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employemnt (1) what is the average duration of time that people spent participating in job clubs; and how many people are currently in job clubs; and what analysis he has made of the wage rates and conditions that apply to the jobs obtained by job club leavers; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people have joined job clubs; how many have left; how many leavers got jobs, and how many entered another positive outcome (a) in each region and (b) in Great Britain as a whole (i) in the year to April 1994 and (ii) since April 1994.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 October 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about Jobclub performance and the wage rates and conditions for Jobclub leavers.

The attached table shows for each region and nationally the number of Jobclub entrants, leavers, job entries and other positive outcomes for the whole of 1993–94 and from 1 April to 31 August. Those who are shown as going into other positive outcomes will have moved on to either training, full-time education or self-employment.

The average length of time people spend in Jobclubs is not routinely recorded. However a sample study in March showed that 58 per cent. of clients leave within 12 weeks and a further 22 per cent. within 21 weeks.

Records of the number of people in Jobclubs at any one time are not kept. However, the attached table shows that 107,952 people joined the programme in the first five months of the 1994–95 operational year, an average of 5,140 a week.

The wage rates that apply to jobs found by Jobclub members were last examined in January 1991, based on a postal survey of individuals who joined in Autumn 1989. At that time, 26 per cent. of respondents went into jobs with a wage of up to £80 per week and a further 60 per cent. went into jobs which paid £81 to £160 per week and 15 per cent. received over £160 per week.

The Employment Service is undertaking a wide ranging evaluation of four of its placing services including Jobclub. This began in the spring and will examine, amongst other things, the wage rates of leavers going into employment. The report should be available next year.

Jobclubs continue to be both popular with the people who join and an effective way of helping them back to work. We are now able to help more members than at any time before and 45 per cent. of leavers are successful in finding jobs.

I hope this is helpful.

Miss Widdecombe: Command papers issued by the Department in the last 12 months are as follows:

Training Leavers

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many respondents to the training for work leavers survey and the youth training leavers survey were early leavers, showing the reasons for early leaving, by total and by percentage of all leavers in the survey, by total and by percentage of all leavers in the survey, for the year 1993–94, or the most recent available period, and for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, shown separately for male, female and in total;

(2) what number and percentage of those leaving (a) training for work and (b) youth training for 1993–94 for each region and for Great Britain as a whole were, six months after leaving, (a) in a full-time job with their work-experience employer, (b) in a full-time job with another employer, (c) employed in their own business, (d) in a part-time job, (e) in voluntary work, (f) on another Government training programme, (g) on a full-time education or training course, (h) unemployed and claiming benefit, (i) unemployed and not claiming benefit, (j) in a job club and (k) doing something else;

(3) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole how many people were participating in (a) training for work—employment training/employment action, (b) community action, (c) learning for work, (d) workstart pilots, (e) north Norfolk action, (f) the business start-up allowance and (g) youth training in each month since March 1994, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Restart Courses

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have been referred to restart courses by employment service counsellors since April 1994 for each region and for Great Britain as a whole; how many of them were unemployed for over two years; how many attended and completed the course; what were the outcomes of the participants; how many had benefit penalties imposed for not attending or failing to complete their attendance at the restart course; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 October 1994.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Restart Courses. I have set out the information you have requested in the attached table.

It may help if I explain that in April, a new two week Restart Course programme was launched. This new course combines part time attendance with an external training provider and individual jobsearch activities in the afternoon.

The course, which builds on the success of the shorter one week Restart Course, is designed to boost confidence and job search activity and there is an emphasis on making real applications for jobs and opportunities. A log of applications is kept and used as a basis for review by Employment Service advisers after the course.

Attending a course is not an alternative to regular job search or other employment or training programmes. Essentially it provides people with the opportunity to explore all the options open to them and give them confidence to take the next step back to work.

People who have been unemployed for two years or more who refuse or fail to take up a place on an Employment Department employment or training programme at their Restart interview, are asked to attend a Restart Course. Those who fail to attend may, under Income Support regulations lose a proportion of their personal Income Support for a period not exceeding the length of the course.

I hope that this is helpful.

Course Referrals

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have been referred to (a) jobplan workshops and (b) workwise and worklink by Employment Service counsellors for each region and Great Britain as a whole since April 1994; how many of them were unemployed for over one year; how many attended and completed the workshop or courses; what were the outcomes of the participants; how many had benefit penalties imposed for not attending or failing to complete their attendance at the Jobplan workshop or

Workwise/Worklink courses; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 26 October 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Jobplan Workshops and Workwise[1]. I have set out the information you have requested in the attached tables.

Jobplan Workshops aim to help people who have been unemployed for a year or more to compete successfully for jobs and opportunities. They will be asked to attend a workshop unless they prefer to take up a place on another Employment Department programme.

In November 1993, as part of his Budget statement, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced two pilot initiatives to help people aged 18 to 24 who have been unemployed for a year. One of these is a four week advice, guidance and job search course called Workwise. The pilot, which provides 10,000 places and has run since April in five Employment Service regions, replaces Jobplan Workshops for people in this age group. The course has been designed to give people the knowledge, skills and motivation to decide and carry through an action plan by setting themselves realistic job goals and a route to achieve them. During the course people learn practical job search skills such as producing an up-to-date CV and where to look for job leads. They also receive individual guidance from the course leader about the other training and employment opportunities available to them. Although formal attendance on the course is part-time, participants are encouraged to put what they have learned into practice during the remaining part of the day; this includes making job applications.

Individuals who fail to attend these programmes may, under Income Support regulations lose a proportion of their personal benefit for a period not exceeding the length of the course.

I hope that this is helpful.

Indonesia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what reports have been received by the International Labour Organisation with respect to Indonesia's conformity with the ILO convention of 1956 ensuring the right to associate in free trade unions.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government of Indonesia ratified ILO convention No. 98 on the right to organise and collective bargaining in 1957. Since then they have frequently reported as requested by the ILO on its application of the convention. Indonesia's most recent report was submitted to the ILO in 1993.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department of Employment does not organise receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Miss Widdecombe: In the past year, there have been two occasions where a spouse has accompanied a departmental Minister on an official overseas visit. Of those, only one visit involved a cost to public funds amounting to £862·95. That occasion was an informal EC social affairs meeting held in Athens on 10 March 1994 and to which the spouses of all EC Ministers attending had been officially invited by the Greek Government.

HEALTH

Surgery

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of cold surgical interventions were carried out (a) in private hospitals or clinics by private practitioners, (b) in national health service hospitals by private practitioners and (c) in NHS hospitals by NHS practitioners in each regional health authority in 1979–80 and in each year since then.

Mr. Sackville: Central returns do not include numbers of operations carried out in private hospitals and clinics. Estimates of the number of elective private operations carried out in national health service hospitals in England for the years 1989–90 to 1991–92 are set out in the table. Comparative information for previous years is not available. Figures for private elective operations by regional health authority are not available.

Information about numbers of all NHS operations by regional health authority is published annually in the "Hospital Episode Statistics", volumes 1 and 2, copies of which are available in the Library.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give figures based on current performance for the number of health service staff she expects will see earnings (a) fall and (b) rise as a result of the introduction of relating pay to performance.

Mr. Malone: The proposals made to staff sides and the professions that represent groups covered by national health service review bodies and included in pay offers to staff sides of non-review body groups would strengthen the links between rewards and performance of the local organisations. Such schemes would be locally determined and depend on the achievement of local objectives for the delivery of high-quality services.

Maternity Services

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements have been made for piloting the draft pregnancy-based clinical data set for maternity with the professions concerned; when the findings of the pilot tests will be available; and if she will place a copy of the draft minimum data set in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: Initial draft proposals for a contract minimum data set covering community, maternity and mental health services were produced in October 1993. Priority was given to the further development and piloting of the community component of this data set.

The results are about to be issued for consultation, and work has resumed on the maternity contract minimum data set. Copies of the consultation document will be placed in the Library when it is available. Arrangements for piloting will follow once the clinical profession have agreed the content of the data set.

St Bartholomew's Hospital

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the use of charitable funds by St Bartholomew's hospital on services normally funded by the Exchequer.

Mr. Malone: Use of charitable funds is a matter for the special trustees who are required to apply the funds in accordance with donors' wishes.

Junior Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the planned reduction in the hours of junior doctors will be reached by end of 1994;

(2) what further plans he has to ensure that the target of 72 hours maximum working week for junior doctors is reached by 1 January 1995.

Mr. Malone: It is hoped that reduction targets will be met. I expect reports from regional task forces for the six months to 30 September 1994 to show further good progress in reducing junior doctors' hours.

I will consider whether any further action is necessary in consultation with my ministerial group on junior doctors' hours which includes representatives of the junior doctors, consultants, the medical royal colleges and national health service management.

General Practitioners (Gifts)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is sent to general practitioners regarding the value of gifts received from drug companies.

Mr. Malone: The General Medical Council is responsible for guidance to general practitioners on gifts received from drug companies.

Female Deaths

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been (a) the number and (b) the percentage of all female deaths from (i) coronary heart disease, (ii) stroke, (iii) breast cancer, (iv) cervical cancer, (v) lung cancer, (vi) malignant melanoma, (vii) other skin cancers, (viii) accidents and (ix) suicide in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: This information will be placed in the Library.

London Ambulance Service

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the extent of her responsibility for the London ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: The South Thames regional health authority is managerially responsible for the London ambulance service. South Thames RHA is accountable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the full range of its responsibilities, including the management of the London ambulance service.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost to the NHS of treating mentally disordered offenders; and how many such offenders have been treated (a) nationally and (b) by each health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the cost and volume of services provided for mentally disordered offenders is not collected separately.

Trust Hospital Cars

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she has given on the maximum amount to be spent on purchasing and leasing cars for individual senior managers of trust hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: None. National health service trusts have the freedom to employ staff on such terms and conditions as they think fit.

Endometriosis

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of endometriosis in each of the last 10 years by region and nationally.

Mr. Sackville: There are no precise statistics on the prevalence of endometriosis. Gynaecologists have reported the condition at laparoscopy in between 2 and 18 per cent. of women, many of whom had no symptoms.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her plans for legislation to abolish regional health authorities.

Mr. Malone: The Government's intention to abolish regional health authorities was announced on 21 October 1993. Legislation to implement the changes will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable allows.

Local Authority Contracts

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many voluntary sector organisations have contracts with local authorities to provide services; and what is the value of those contracts;

(2) how many private sector organisations have contracts with local authorities to provide services; and what is the value of those contracts.

Mr. Bowis: Such contractual matters are for local negotiation and decision.

Residential and Nursing Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people receiving public funding towards residential or nursing care also had to contribute towards the cost for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by authority the number of private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes that have closed since implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984; and how many residents have been affected.

Mr. Bowis: This information could be provided on nursing homes only at disproportionate cost and is not available on residential care homes.

Learning Disability Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of admissions to learning disability hospitals by health authority for each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is published in "Ordinary and Day Case Admissions for England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which authorities failed to spend 85 per cent. of the special transitional grant in the independent sector during the year 1993–94.

Mr. Bowis: Audited returns detailing community care spending in the independent sector by health authorities in 1993–94 must be submitted to the Department by 31 December 1994.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the proportion of the total special transitional grant spent by each authority on domiciliary care during the year 1993–94;

(2) if he will list by authority the proportion of the total special transitional grant spent in the voluntary sector during the year 1993–94.

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for local authorities and information on it is not available centrally.

Sight Tests

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average private sight test fee currently charged by opticians.

Mr. Malone: Information about the charges made for private sight tests is not collected by the Department.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not organise such receptions.

Prozac

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the accuracy of information given to general practitioners in connection with the prescription of the drug Prozac; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Prozac is an effective and very widely prescribed anti-depressant. The data sheet for Prozac which contains prescribing information and side-effects, is produced by the manufacturer and is authorised by the licensing authority. It is included in the data sheet compendium which is sent to all doctors. The accuracy of the data sheet is kept under review by the Medicines Control Agency, and where necessary changes are made to reflect evolving knowledge of its use, effectiveness and safety.

In addition, all general practitioners regularly receive free information on drugs available in the United Kingdom through the "British National Formulary, Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin", "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance" and the medicines resource centre. Professional advice is also available from the medical advisers support centre. Copies of the documents are available in the Library.

Foster Carers

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the number of and (b) the percentage of local authority foster carers who receive a fee for fostering in addition to the basic boarding-out allowance, based on the latest available information.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is not available centrally. However, I understand from the National Foster Care Association that the percentage is very small.

Food Poisoning

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of food poisoning notifications to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (a) for each year since 1982 and (b) in 1994 to the latest available date.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Food poisoning notifications: England and Wales, 1982–1994

[2] Notifications to 7 October.

There is no single explanation for the rising trend in food poisoning. A contributory factor may be a reduction in under-reporting. On 22 October 1993, my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health announced the start of a major study of infectious intestinal diseases in England. The purpose of the study is to establish the incidence, sources, causes and socio-economic costs of infectious intestinal disease. This is the most comprehensive study of its type ever attempted. It will involve more than 70 general practices and more than 20,000 volunteers. The study will be completed in mid-1995.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures available for this year of the total number of laboratory reports of salmonella in foodstuffs to the Public Health Laboratory Service in England and Wales.

Mr. Sackville: The Public Health Laboratory of Enteric Pathogens has confirmed that to the end of September, 1,152 food isolates submitted were found positive for salmonella.

General Practitioners Fundholders

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made as to whether fundholding general practitioners are able to prescribe drugs on the basis of patient benefit rather than cost; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Fundholding empowers general practitioners to ensure the most appropriate care for their patients whether by prescribing medicines, referring to specialist services or other treatments.

Thameside NHS Trust (Learning Disabilities Services)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will set up a further committee of inquiry into the disabilities services managed by Thameside NHS trust to cover the period before 1991; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will place in the Library the report of the Mental Health Act Commission in respect of client A, referred to in appendix I, paragraph 4, of the inquiry report "Learning from the Past", relating to aspects of learning disabilities services managed by Thameside NHS trust;

(3) where Mr. H, referred to in the inquiry report "Learning from the Past", relating to aspects of learning disabilities services managed by Thameside NHS trust, is now working;

Mr. Bowis: We have been sent a copy of the independent inquiry report and I understand that the local agencies are acting on its 18 recommendations.

The inquiry was commissioned by South Essex health authority in conjunction with Thameside Community Healthcare national health service trust. The hon. Member should approach those organisations for answers to detailed questions about the conduct of the inquiry and its findings. In particular, it is the health authority's role to ensure that local residents have access to services of the highest quality.

Royal Northern Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans exist for the future of the Royal Northern Hospital, Holloway road, London N19 to be retained for health use; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The future of the Royal Northern hospital is a matter for Camden and Islington health authority.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for the closure of accident and emergency departments at the North Middlesex hospital, Royal Free hospital and the Whittington hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The provision of accident and emergency services is the responsibility of local health authorities, and is determined in the light of local needs, priorities and resources. The hon. Member may wish to contact New River health authority for details of any plans concerning the North Middlesex hospital; and Camden and Islington health authority for details regarding the Royal Free and Whittington hospitals.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next plans to visit Ilford.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no current plans to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pension Funds

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that company pensioners are represented on the board of trustees of pension funds.

Mr. Arbuthnot: We propose that occupational pension scheme members should have the right to nominate at least one third of their scheme's trustees. It is for members to decide whether they wish to select a pensioner trustee. That is in line with the recommendation of the Pension Law Review Committee. We are still considering the best way to implement our proposals on the selection and appointment of member-nominated trustees in the light of the replies to our consultation document.

Poor Families

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the worst-off 10 per cent. of families have (a) motor cars, (b) colour television sets, (c) telephones and (d) videos.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table. The households below average income report suggests that the bottom 10 per cent. of the income distribution may not represent the "worst off" 10 per cent. For this reason information is also provided for the bottom 20 per cent.

	Bottom 10 per cent.		Bottom 20 per cent.

Notes:

1. The source data for televisions (Family Expenditure Survey 1992) does not distinguish between black and white/colour sets.
2. Information for other items is taken from Households Below Average Income 1979–1991/92, a copy of which is in the Library.

Correspondence

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report, correspondence to the hon. Member for Bristol, East from the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People about households below average income, dated 12 August and 31 August.

Mr. Burt: The correspondence in relation to the seven questions asked by the hon. Lady is as follows.

Letter to the hon. Member for Bristol East from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People dated 12 August 1994:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking what was the average equivalent income at April 1994 prices for (a) the poorest 10 per cent. and (b) the poorest 20 per cent. from the latest households below average income analysis, before and after housing costs in 1979, 1981, 1987, 1988 to 1989, 1990–91 and 1991–92 for (i) a pensioner couple, (ii) a single pensioner, (iii) a couple with children, (iv) a couple without children, (v) a single adult with children and (vi) a single adult without children.

Unfortunately at the time Alistair Burt was unable to reply and promised to write.

Information for the bottom 20 per cent. is in the tables, which follows table A5 in the latest Households Below Average Income report. Reliable information on the bottom 10 per cent. of the groups specified is not available.

All estimates are subject to sampling error which may affect the validity of comparisons between groups at a point in time. Table A4 of HBAI contains an assessment of the extent of this source of uncertainty and should be used for comparisons between 1979 and the latest year. Results for singles and couples will be affected by a discontinuity from 1990 related to cohabiting; please see Appendix 10 in HBAI 1979—1990/91 for details. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Letter to the hon. Member for Bristol East from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People, dated 12 August 1994:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking what would have been the effect on the numbers of children in households living on incomes (a) below the 1979 bottom decile median and (b) below 50 per cent. of 1979 average income, by 1991–92, using the methodology of the latest households below average income report, if child benefit had (i) remained at its 1979 level in real terms and (ii) had been increased relative to household income.

Unfortunately at the time Alistair Burt was unable to reply and promised to write.

I regret that information is not available. Child benefit interacts with other components of household income, such as income-related benefits, and reliable assumptions cannot be made about the net effect on income of hypothetical scenarios. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Letter to the hon. Member for Bristol East from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People, dated 12 August 1994:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking for an assessment of the effect of a rise in the survey response rate on the latest edition of Households Below Average Income (HBAI). You also asked for details of any research into the relationship between income and the response to Government surveys on household expenditure and income.

Unfortunately at the time Alistair Burt was unable to reply and promised to write.

The Family Expenditure Survey (FES) response rate has remained relatively stable over the period covered by HBAI, reaching 72 per cent. in 1992. Any rise or fall in the survey response rate is compensated for by the use of grossing factors, which ensure that household population totals in HBAI continue to reflect the whole population of the United Kingdom. Appendix 3 of the latest HBAI report gives further information. We have no reliable information on the income characteristics of survey non-participants to enable the effect of a rise in survey participation to be addressed.

I understand that a study is being made of the FES sample from January to June 1991 as compared with the 1991 Population Census. However, the Census contains no income information, and the study will not cover this area. The main results of this study are expected to be published in 1995. My Department is aware of extensive research literature on non-response bias and takes this into account in the preparation of HBAI. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Letter to the hon. Member for Bristol East from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People, dated 12 August 1994:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking how many children were in households living on incomes (a) below the 1979 bottom decile and (b) below 50 per cent. of 1979 average income, in 1979, 1981, 1987, 1988–89, 1990–91 and 1991–92, following tables 11.1 and 11.5 of the latest households below average income report; and what was the household income in current prices of these two cut off points for each of the years in question.

Unfortunately at the time Alistair Burt was unable to reply and promised to write.

The information is in the tables.

Your request for numbers below the 1979 bottom decile has been interpreted as a request for numbers below the 1979 bottom decile median. Household income in current prices for each year in question has been taken to mean current prices in each year rather than today's prices. The real (1994) values of the thresholds specified have been included in the tables but these values will be the same for any of the years shown. This is because the thresholds relate to the income distribution in 1979 rather than to conditions in each year. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Letter to the hon. Member for Bristol East from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People dated 31 August 1994:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking what was the change in real incomes by decile group, 1979 to 1991–92, including the self-employed, before and after housing costs, following table A1 and appendix 10 of the latest households below average income report; and what was the equivalised and unequivalised income per household in each decile group, for households with children. Unfortunately at the time Alistair Burt was unable to reply and promised to write.

The information is not available in the precise form requested. Reliable estimates of changes in equivalised real incomes are not available for decile groups (and so is provided in the attached tables in quintile groups). In addition, it is not possible to give unequivalised incomes for all households with children as these depend on the number and ages of children in these households. The attached tables therefore contain equivalent money values of special examples of families with children. It is important to bear in mind that the results do not track what happens to a particular set of individuals over time and are as likely to be influenced by changes in the mix of groups as changes in income levels within each group. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Letter to the hon. Member for Bristol East from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People dated 31 August 1994:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking for the mean disposable income of each of the family types, as listed in the latest households below average income report, of the lowest decile group, second lowest decile group, and highest decile group in (a) current and (b) April 1994 prices, as ranked according to this Department's convention of equivalised income in 1979, 1988–89 and 1991–92. Unfortunately at the time Alistair Burt was unable to reply and promised to write.

The available estimates are provided in the tables.

It is important to bear in mind that the results provided cannot be interpreted as indicating that the incomes of these groups have gone up or down over the period. Any income changes will reflect shifts of the number of people in each family type group from one decile group to another. For example, if a family type's income remains unchanged but there was a shift of that particular family type from the bottom decile into the second decile, the median income of the particular family type in the bottom decile in these tables would show a fall. Conversely, if that family type's income again remains the same, but there was a shift of that family type from the second decile into the bottom decile, the median income of that particular family type in the bottom decile in these tables would show a rise. But in both these examples the real incomes amongst that family type did not change. A copy of this letter will be place in the Library.

Letter to the hon. Member for Bristol East from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People: 31 August 1994

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question asking for the equivalent monetary value in £ per week at April 1994 prices, following table A2 of the latest households below average income report, in 1979, 1990–91 and 1991–92, before and after housing costs, of the decile means and medians of the two poorest decile groups and the richest decile group, and the total population mean of (a) a single adult, (b) a couple with no children, (c) a couple with one child aged three years, (d) a couple with one child aged 16 years, (e) a couple with two children aged three and eight years, (f) a couple with three children aged three, eight and 11 years and (g) a couple with three children aged 11, 16 and 17 years. Unfortunately at the time Alistair Burt was unable to reply and promised to write.

The information is not available in the precise form requested.

Reliable estimates of the means of decile groups are not available. The estimates provided therefore follow those in Table A2 of the latest Households Below Average Income report and therefore only show the median of each decile group. It is important to bear in mind that the results do not track what happens to a particular set of individuals and are as likely to be influenced by changes in the mix of groups as changes in income levels within each group. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Sickness Benefit

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the cost of each medical examination carried out by his Department's medical officers on customers claiming sickness benefit for the first time and the cost of each subsequent medical examination of customers in receipt of sickness benefit in (a) the north Tyne area and (b) the south Tyne area for the year ending 31 March; and how many (i) first-time and (ii) other claimants' claims for sickness benefit was rejected on the basis of the examining medical officer's report in each area in that year.

Mr. Hague: The administration of sickness benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Clelland, dated 25 October 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Sickness Benefit (SB) recipients in the north and south Tyne areas and the cost of medical examinations.

The information is not available in the format requested. This is because Benefits Agency boundaries do not correspond with county or borough boundaries. SB recipients in the north Tyne area are dealt with by the Newcastle and north Tyneside district offices; SB recipients in the south Tyne area are dealt with by the south Tyneside district office.

For the year ending 31 March the number of customers disallowed SB following a Benefits Agency Medical Services report that they were capable of some work was as follows:

(i) first time claim (where a customer claimed SB for the first time)—5 in the Newcastle and north Tyneside Districts and 5 in the south Tyneside district.

(ii) other claimants' claims (where a customer has claimed SB in the past)—14 in the Newcastle and north Tyneside districts and 18 in the south Tyneside district.

Information on the overall cost of Benefits Agency examinations for SB is not available. However, I am able to tell you that the cost in terms of payments to doctors and nurses for each examination is approximately £22·00. The costs of the administrative overheads for SB examinations is not recorded separately from those of other benefits and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women are currently members of an occupational pension scheme; and how many men aged 65 to 69 years and women aged 60 to 64 years are currently in receipt of an occupational pension.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The most recent figures available[1] show that in 1991 there were 6·8 million male and 3·9 million female active occupational scheme members[2]. In the same year there were 0·92 million men aged 65 to 69 years and 0·39 million women aged 60 to 64 years in receipt of an occupational pension.

Notes:

Automatic Benefit Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the project brief for automatic benefit payments accounting systems at post offices allows for the introduction of transaction charges for (a) Post Office operators and (b) benefit claimants.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The system of charges to be paid by the Department of Social Security to Post Office Counters Ltd. for encashments under the automated system will be a matter for negotiation. The system for remunerating individual sub-post offices is a commercial agreement between Post Office Counters Ltd. and the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters.

There is no intention to introduce a transaction charge for benefit claimants.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide information on the level of bank charges paid to date by the Child Support Agency and the extent to which they have been absorbed by clients' funds temporarily held by the agency.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Clive Betts dated 25 October 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security on the level of bank charges paid by the Child Support Agency to date and the extent to which they have been absorbed by client's funds held by the Agency.

To 31 July 1994, the Agency has paid £173,400 in bank charges. The greater proportion of the Agency's expenditure on bank charges occurs when absent parents use Transcash to make cash payments of maintenance via Girobank. Charges are also made for the use of computer tapes to transfer money to the Client Funds Account. In addition, between April 1993 and March 1994, charges were also incurred in respect of the processing of computer tapes, direct debits, standing orders and the use of the Agency's bank's Head Office collection account for clearing cheques. Invoices for bank charges are received from the Agency's bankers and are paid from the Department of Social Security Administration and Miscellaneous Services Class XIV, Vote 4 account.

No bank charges have been paid from clients' funds temporarily held by the Agency.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to review the workings of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The workings of the Child Support Agency are under constant review.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the first report of the chief child support officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The report is being published today. The report's findings on the standard of adjudication in the Child Support Agency are disappointing. However, the chief child support officer, Mr. Ernie Hazlewood, recognises the exceptional pressures faced by the agency in its first year and the extremely high level of outside attention focused on staff, many of whom were new to the work. In addition, the deliberate non-co-operation of some absent parents has made the task faced by the agency a very difficult one.

The Child Support Agency is committed to raising standards of adjudication and many of the difficulties identified in the report were recognised by the agency in its annual report, published in July. The CCSO acknowledges the plans already made by managers to effect improvement. To supplement and reinforce the work already begun, he recommends extra emphasis be given to the key areas of adjudication training, recording of decisions, periodic checks and some specific parts of the formula. The agency clearly has a long way to go to reach an acceptable standard of decision making and considerable difficulties to overcome, but recent monitoring exercises indicate that improvement has already occurred.

Both the CCSO and I look forward to continuing progress in future years.

VAT Allowances

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what interdepartmental arrangements he has made to ensure that the moneys paid to pensioners and families as compensation for VAT increases are not eroded by being taken into account when other benefits are calculated; and if he will make a statement on how the Government are protecting them against the erosion of their benefits;

(2) how much money the Government have saved as a result of taking into account the allowance for VAT when other benefits are calculated.

Mr. Roger Evans: In April 1994, income-related benefits were increased to provide help with VAT on domestic fuel. In April 1995, they will be increased again. Claimants with other benefits that are taken into account in assessing entitlement to an income-related benefit therefore still receive help with the levy. The total package involves expenditure of £2·5 billion over three years.

Child Maintenance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce legislation that will take account of absent parents who set themselves up as self-employed in order to avoid maintenance payments.

Mr. Burt: None. The formula for assessing liability for child support maintenance applies equally to employed and self-employed parents.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of women who are experiencing difficulties with the Child Support Agency regarding payment of maintenance moneys.

Mr. Burt: The information about complaints, difficulties and queries is not collated in the form requested. Some 9,542 complaints and queries relating to the Child Support Agency were recorded between 1 April and 31 August 1994. This figure represents less than 5 per cent. of the cases taken on to that date.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Hague: No such receptions are held.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Hague: On one occasion, at a cost of £538·48. Such travel has not been undertaken at a Minister's own cost.

DEFENCE

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Soames: The amounts spent by my Department on official entertainment, refreshments and protocol entertainment for each year since 1990 are:

1990–91—£3,900,000
1991–92—£4,100,000
1992–93—£4,950,000
1993–94—£4,580,000

These figures include expenditure incurred by the Ministry of Defence headquarters, by formations and establishments of the armed forces at home and abroad, and by individual officers occupying command and international appointments for which entertainment allowances are payable.

Expenditure on official hospitality by agencies is the repsonsibility of individual chief executives under the terms of their framework documents. The figures are as follows:

Nerve Gas

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of nerve gas stocks have been disposed of; what locations were used for this dumping; and what monitoring has been done subsequently of these sites.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has undertaken the disposal of sizeable quantities of nerve agents on three occasions since 1946. In 1946, British forces disposed of some 3,000 tons of captured German WWII munitions containing nerve agent in hulks scuttled in the Skagerrak. An additional 17,000 tons of captured German munitions were similarly dumped at sea in the north Atlantic in 1955–56. No subsequent monitoring of the Atlantic dump sites was undertaken in view of their depth—over 2,000 m—and because, on exposure to sea water, nerve agents rapidly decompose to non-toxic compounds through dilution and hydrolysis. Monitoring of the Skagerrak sites by the Norwegian Defence Research Establishment in 1990 and the Swedish Maritime Department in 1992 showed no evidence of nerve agents or their decomposition products.

Finally, some 20 tons of nerve agent produced prior to 1956 was destroyed by chemical hydrolysis and dilution at the former Chemical Defence Establishment, Nancekuke, Cornwall in 1968. Following tests to ensure the hydrolysed material was harmless to the marine environment, it was discharged into the sea. Additionally, from time to time, small quantities of agents are destroyed routinely by chemical methods and incineration at CBDE, Porton Down.

Porton Down

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department, or the Chemical and Biological Defence Agency, gave the producers of the "Network First" programme, "The Secrets of Porton Down", broadcast on 11 October.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment. I have asked the chief executive of the CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 26 October 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what assistance his Department, or the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, gave the producers of the Network First programme on the "Secrets of Porton Down", broadcast on 11 October has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The producers of the Network First programme broadcast on 11 October 1994 first approached this Establishment on 6 December 1993 to say that they had been commissioned by the ITV Network to make a one hour documentary programme looking at the history of chemical and biological warfare research in Britain for transmission in 1994. This was followed by a meeting with the Director and Associate Producer of the programme in the Ministry of Defence with the Head of News and myself. We were provided with an outline of the programme which said that it would look at the history of British research into chemical and biological warfare and defence and assess its current status. They made it clear that they felt that CBDE Porton Down had made a very significant contribution to chemical and biological defence and wished to examine the direction of such defence now that the East-West situation had relaxed and the Chemical Weapons Convention had been opened signature and steps were being taken to strengthen the Biological Weapons Convention.

3. This was followed by a reconnaissance visit by the Director and Associate Producer to CBDE Porton Down on Friday 14 January 1994. This led to a request dated 20 January 1994 which stated that this was an appropriate moment to take stock of the history and development of chemical and biological warfare and defence, a history in which Porton Down had played a leading role for almost 80 years. Requests were made for filming facilities at CBDE Porton Down together with an interview with myself. Such filming and the interview which lasted for about three hours took place on 3 and 10 February 1994. In addition, CBDE provided on loan to the producers five CBDE films and four video tapes.

4. Our practice over the past decade has been to respond positively to requests from media for facilities at CBDE Porton Down and these have generally succeeded in giving a far wider public perception of the role of CBDE which is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons might be used against them. This improved public perception has also been aided by CBDE being a Defence Agency since April 1991 resulting in the publication of Annual Reports and Accounts. In addition, in July 1994, we launched a new brochure "Protecting Through Scientific Understanding" together with an accompanying video.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men or women have died as a result of experiments undertaken on them with chemical or biological warfare agents at Porton Down Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 26 October, 1994:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him how many Service personnel have died as a result of experiments undertaken on them with chemical or biological warfare agents at Porton Down CBDE has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use service volunteers to:

> a. assess the ability of service personnel to function to function with new equipment and procedures,
> b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and
> c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.
> No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Since the start of the Service volunteer programme in the 1920s, there has been a single fatality in 1953 as reported in the Official Report (9 June 1953, Volume 516, Column 7-8 and 22 June 1953, Volume 516, Column 105) when Leading Aircraftsman Ronald Maddison died from the effects of asphyxia after taking part in a trial at the then Chemical Defence Experimental Establishment at Porton Down. A detailed inquiry was then held into the circumstances and following this inquiry which was carried out by eminent independent scientists, new guidelines were laid down to ensure the safety of Service volunteers. In the subsequent 40 years, there has been no fatality nor has there been any evidence that any Service volunteers have suffered deterioration in their health as a result of participating in studies at Porton Down.

Upholder Submarines

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the Government's intentions for the Upholder submarines.

Mr. Freeman: In the light of the changes in the strategic environment, the Upholder class is being withdrawn from service. HMS Unicorn, the last of the four boats, will pay off next month. We are currently examining options for their sale, lease or storage, bearing in mind the investment which they represent. No decisions have yet been taken.

Ammunition Contracts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the financial effect on the British defence manufacturing industry of the placing of ammunition contracts with foreign manufacturers by the Ministry of Defence under the advice of Mr. Gordon Foxley.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to say with any certainty what impact Foxley's corrupt activities in the field of fuse manufacture had on British defence manufacturing industry.

Contracts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all contracts tendered for, and handled in any way on behalf of, Saudi Arabia by his Department acting as agents for the Saudi Arabian Government; which firms tendered for, or were awarded, those contracts; and which business agents were appointed in connection with these contracts.

Mr. Freeman: Equipment supplied under the Al-Yamamah programme includes Tornado and Hawk aircraft and naval minesweepers along with associated equipment, support and infrastructure. Further orders for Tornado and training aircraft have been announced since January 1993. Details of the contracts are confidential between the British and Saudi Arabian Governments. The British Government have not employed business agents in connection with these contracts.

Catering

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the difference in the allowances per service man for catering purposes per day in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force; if he will set out each allowance; and what factors underlie the differences between the amounts.

Mr. Soames: The allowances per day for catering purposes are based on a ration scale costed at current prices and known as the daily messing rate. The ration scale is the same for personnel of all three services.

The scale is costed according to the supply source of food items. Where the source of supply is more expensive due to local conditions the daily messing rate is higher to take account of extra costs. For ships and submarines a slightly different scale is used to take account of their special circumstances.

A general overseas ration scale exists for overseas bases and attachments. This scale has a higher calorific value to take account of conditions such as heat, cold and humidity. The rate applicable to units abroad will also depend on prices in the local economy for food stuffs which are bought locally.

Examples of daily messing rates for October 1994 are:

Army, RAF and RN Shore establishments (including Germany and Hong Kong)	1·75
RN ships and submarines	1·86
Falklands	2·03
Cyprus	1·93
Gibraltar	2·07

Where personnel are in special circumstances or performing duties which require extra energy—such as divers or members of mountain rescue teams—they are entitled to supplementary allowances.

Royal Marines

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the investment appraisals in respect of the 16 Deal-based options referred to in paragraph 8 of the consultative document dated 17 October 1994 entitled "Future Location of Royal Marines Training".

Mr. Soames: I have written to the hon. Member and a copy of the letter is being placed in the Library of the House.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what alternative defence uses are being considered for RAF Finningley.

Mr. Soames: No alternative defence uses have yet been identified for RAF Finningley. In accordance with departmental procedures, however, a full inter-service trawl will be undertaken in parallel with the consultation period to identify any possible alternative defence uses, in the event that a decision to close RAF Finningley is taken after formal consultation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures will be followed if the MOD decides to dispose of the RAF Finningley site.

Mr. Soames: If it is decided to dispose of RAF Finningley, standard departmental procedures would be followed. This would include discussions with the local authority on future use and the appointment of consultants to advise on a disposal strategy and optimum method of sale.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will hold discussions with Doncaster metropolitan borough council and the local regeneration partnership on how RAF Finningley could become a joint military and civilian airfield.

Mr. Soames: The proposal to close RAF Finningley will be subject to full consultation with trade unions and other interested parties. I would be happy to receive details of any substantive proposals regarding future use the site that Doncaster metropolitan borough council may wish to put forward as part of the consultation process.

Appropriation Accounts

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff were involved in the movements in the public interest which led to the expenditure recorded in the notes to class I, vote 1 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: Seven staff received special payments following a move in the public interest.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many countries are covered by the £20,315,000 in forgone receipts referred to in the other notes to class I, vote 1 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: Thirty-six countries are covered by the £20,315,000 in forgone receipts referred to in the other notes to class 1 vote 1 of the appropriation accounts 1993–94.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he proposes to take to make low flying avoidance areas public.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to alter my Department's policy of not releasing specific details of flying restrictions in individual areas.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made to introduce flight simulators as a substitute for low flying sorties.

Mr. Soames: The use of flight simulators is an integral part of our training programme. However, the performance characteristics of current simulator technology do not provide an acceptable substitute for low flying training. We do, however, continue to monitor closely developments in this area of technology.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make all non-United Kingdom air crews included in low flying over the United Kingdom subject to the jurisdiction of the RAF police.

Mr. Soames: All foreign military aircrews operating within the United Kingdom low flying system are subject to the same flying regulations as apply to United Kingdom aircrews. The RAF police are responsible for investigating alleged breaches of the regulations, whether United Kingdom or foreign aircrews were involved. In the event that a breach of regulations is confirmed, jurisdiction, in terms of disciplinary action, rests initially with the commanding officer of the aircrew concerned or, in the case of foreign aircrew, with their relevant national authorities, not with the RAF police.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which NATO countries allow low flying training below 250 ft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member as this information is not readily available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce an independent system of investigation of public complaints about alleged breaches of low flying regulations by low-flying aircraft over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: No. We are satisfied that the existing system is impartial, effective and best placed to investigate public complaints about alleged breaches of low flying regulations, and therefore see no reason to introduce such a system.

Bird-strike Incidents

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of observed birds or intensity of bird activity specified in the bird warning movement message for the Aberlady bay area on the morning of 30 September.

Mr. Soames: There was no bird hazard warning issued for the Aberlady bay area on the morning in question.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the date, location, aircraft type, altitude and damage category for all bird-strike incidents involving military aircraft in the Forth estuary area since 1990.

Mr. Soames: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice is given to military aircrew concerning the minimum altitude at which aircraft should cross coastlines in order to reduce the risk of bird-strike.

Mr. Soames: Aircrew are advised that, wherever possible, coastlines should be crossed at a minimum height of 500 ft, but preferably 1,000 ft.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Soames: It is not my Department's practice to organise such events. Those who express an interest in public appointments without specifying a particular body are referred to the public appointments unit of the Cabinet Office who have their own arrangements for publishing the requirements and opportunities of such appointments.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Soames: Since the beginning of 1994, Ministers in my Department have been accompanied by their spouses on public duties overseas on five occasions. On each of those occasions the extra cost to the Department would have been either negligible or nil, as the spouses in question travelled on RAF aircraft which were already assigned to the visit, and on four occasions were accommodated in official residences.

On one occasion a Minister and his spouse were accommodated in a hotel but in a room that the Minister would have occupied if he had not been accompanied.

Procedures outlined in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" were followed in all cases.

Japan (Plutonium)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the proliferation risks associated with the transport of plutonium from Europe to Japan were discussed at the NATO-Japan third security conference in Brussels held on 19 to 20 October.

Mr. Goodlad: I have been asked to reply.

During its recent meeting the third NATO-Japan security conference took careful note of the requirement for maintaining the highest standards of protection for all fissile material.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Rwanda

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European counterparts regarding the provision of European Union aid for rehabilitation and reconstruction in Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed the outcome of the recent EU troika visit to Rwanda with his European colleagues at the EU Foreign Affairs Council on 4 October. There was broad agreement on the need for continuing humanitarian aid, for short-term rehabilitation programmes to encourage the return of refugees and for longer-term resumption of development co-operation.

Aid Programme

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy regarding aid funding for economically unsound projects.

Mr. Baldry: It is our policy to finance projects only after rigorous appraisal against economic, financial, technical, social and environmental criteria.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what test of economic efficiency is applied to projects seeking financial assistance under the aid programme.

Mr. Baldry: Projects should at least match the economic rate of return appropriate to the recipient country. Where no rate of return is calculated, cost-effectiveness is tested by comparing alternative ways of achieving project objectives. The methodology used in economic appraisal is set out in the ODA's publication "Appraisal of Projects in Developing Countries—a Guide for Economists", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requirement for economic efficiency in individual aid projects is included in the Overseas Development Administration's priority objective of promoting economic reform.

Mr. Baldry: Most aid for internationally agreed economic reform programmes has been in the form of balance of payments support. Project aid in support of reform is largely in the form of technical assistance. That is not usually susceptible to appraisal for economic efficiency, but is carefully assessed for cost-effectiveness.

Belize

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all Overseas Development Administration projects in Belize with the costs involved.

Mr. Baldry: A list of current Overseas Development Administration projects in Belize which are costed in excess of £50,000 has been placed in the Libraries of the House. In addition to those projects, the British high commission in Belize has an allocation of £100,000 to finance small projects of a developmental, social or welfare nature.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations of the 1992 review of the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Baldry: The new arrangements for the administration of the aid and trade provision referred to in the reply which my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Sir M. Lennox-Boyd) gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway) on 17 June 1993, Official Report, column 675-76, took effect on that date.

Mozambique

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is providing for the elections in Mozambique.

Mr. Baldry: We have contributed about £2·2 million to the United Nations Development Programme's electoral assistance project, including our share of the EC's contribution. We have also contributed £500,000 to the UN Trust Fund for the Implementation of the Peace Process in Mozambique to help RENAMO transform itself into a political party.

We are providing 30 British observers for the UN and EU international election observers teams. Several United Kingdom parliamentarians are also attending under other auspices.

Iraq

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to maintain humanitarian assistance to the Kurdish population of northern Iraq, following recent events in the Gulf region.

Mr. Baldry: Saddam's threatening actions near the Kuwaiti border have not affected our plans for aid for northern Iraq. We have committed some £4·7 million this year for medical assistance and village rehabilitation. We shall continue to keep in touch with the Kurdish administration, UN agencies, NGOs and others involved in northern Iraq.

Haiti

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what economic or other aid he plans for the United Kingdom to give to President Aristide of Haiti.

Mr. Baldry: We are ready to consider assistance for police training once security conditions have allowed the UN mission in Haiti to deploy. We have also agreed in principle to the resumption of EU aid. Haiti's national indicative programme for the period 1990–95 will be 120 mecu—£94 million—of which the United Kingdom share will be £15 million. This will be implemented as soon as the EU and Haiti agree priority sectors.

Third World Department

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer concerning third world debt.

Mr. Baldry: By long-standing convention, discussions of this nature between Departments are confidential.

Albania

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total amount of bilateral aid given by the United Kingdom to Albania in each of the last three years; and if he will list the main projects to have benefited from this aid.

Mr. Baldry: Total United Kingdom bilateral aid to Albania for the last three financial years was:

1991–92	615,000
1992–93	417,000
1993–94	[1]921,000

[1] Provisional figure

A large proportion of this was emergency aid, mostly food and medicines: £615,000 in 1991–92; £371,000 in 1992–93; and £501,000 in 1993–94. The remainder, £46,000 in 1992–93 and £420,000 in 1993–94, consists of funds disbursed under the know-how fund, Britain's programme of technical assistance for the countries of central and eastern Europe. The KHF was extended to Albania in June 1992. The main projects completed or under way are:

a one year placement for a British agricultural consultant to assist the National Agency for State Farms with the process of privatisation (completed); a two year project to assist the development of private farmers associations (ongoing);

funding of volunteers from East European Partnership (EEP) to work on a major EU PHARE business advice and training project for regional business centres (ongoing);

a two year training programme for local government finance officers to help implement new local government legislation (ongoing);

placement of a haematologist to assist the Director of the Tirana Blood Bank with the transition to a voluntary system of blood donation (ongoing);

a grant for EEP volunteers to provide training and consultancy advice at the home for Mentally Handicapped Children in Berat (ongoing);

a project to improve the quality and supply of water by Korca water company. The project will also produce a manual of good practice to be used elsewhere in Albania (ongoing);

a project to train Albanian geoscientists in coastal zone management and to help establish a Coastal Geology Unit in Albania (ongoing);

a programme of consultancy and training for the Albanian prison service, provided by Her Majesty's Prison Service (ongoing);

a series of visits to and from Albania by members of the Devon Fire Service and Albanian fire officers, culminating in a training course for 14 Albanians in Devon in November 1994 (ongoing);

a publishing seminar organised by International Book Development (IBD) Training as part of a larger World Bank programme designed to develop an approach to textbook provision appropriate to Albania (completed).

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of multilateral aid packages given to Albania in which the United Kingdom or the European Union has contributed.

Mr. Baldry: Several multilateral agencies to which Britain makes a regular contribution are active in Albania.

The EU's PHARE programme was extended to Albania in 1992. In 1992 and 1993 a total of 53 mecu—£42 million—was disbursed on a number of projects in agriculture, private sector development, health, transport, environment, public administration and higher education. Britain contributes approximately 16 per cent. of the total PHARE budget, which, in 1994, represents about £7 million for Albania.

The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, in which the British Government have an 8·5 per cent. shareholding, has approved loans totalling 34 mecu—£26·5 million—for investment projects in Albania. It has also committed 4·7 mecu—£3·6 million—to technical co-operation projects in telecommunications, finance, energy, the environment and tourism.

Since it began lending to Albania, the International Development Association has approved a total of US$138 million in development credits, of which $87 million remained undisbursed on 30 June 1994. During the IDA 1993–94 financial year, it approved credits for housing, labour market development, social safety net development, water rehabilitation and school rehabilitation. The UK contributed 6·15 per cent. to the latest IDA replenishment—IDA–10—in July 1993.

Three UN agencies, UNICEF, the UNDP and WHO, are active in Albania. UNICEF, which received $8.5 million from Britain this financial year, has a $6 million programme for Albania covering the years 1993–95. WHO has a $50,000 programme in albania for 1994–95 and the UNDP a $6 million budget for the same period. The UK contributes approximately 5 per cent. of the annual global budget of both agencies.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Enterprise

16. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet Scottish Enterprise officials to discuss future financial allocations and priorities.

Mr. Stewart: As my right hon. Friend said in his earlier reply to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North, (Dr. Reid) he plans to meet the chairman and chief executive of Scottish Enterprise next month.

Assured Tenants

17. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many assured tenants there are in Scottish Housing Association dwellings.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at 31 March 1994, there were over 40,000 assured tenancies representing 60 per cent. of the total housing association stock.

Commercial Property Market

18. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the workings of the commercial property market in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations about the workings of the commercial property market in Scotland.

Homelessness

19. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has in respect of homelessness in Scotland.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received relating to the statutory duty on local authorities to provide permanent accommodation for homeless; and what percentage of these representations favoured retention of this statutory duty.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have received nearly 160 responses to our consultation paper. Ninety-seven per cent. of the consultees expressed strong support for the retention of local housing authorities' duty to provide permanent accommodation for unintentionally homeless people in priority need. We are now considering the responses to all of the questions posed and we shall announce our decisions in due course.

Manufacturing Industry

20. Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Scottish Council of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss its manufacturing industry study.

Mr. Lang: I and my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry maintain regular contact with the Scottish Council of the CBI on a wide range of issues.

Higher Education

21. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet his European colleagues to discuss the entry qualification for higher education.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I plan to attend the next meeting of EC Education Ministers on 5 December in Brussels. Entry qualifications to higher education are not on the agenda on that occasion. The Scottish Office Education Department is represented at a Council of Europe conference beginning today on recognition of higher education qualifications.

Youth Unemployment

24. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss youth unemployment.

Mr. Lang: I have no plans to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss youth unemployment, although we correspond regularly about a range of issues.

General Practitioner Fundholding

25. Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner fundholding practices there are now in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: According to the latest information provided by health boards there are currently 107 operational fundholders in Scotland.

Local Government Reform

26. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current estimate of the costs of local government reform in Strathclyde and Lothian region.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's estimate of the costs and savings that will result from its proposals to reorganise local government in Scotland has been calculated on a Scotland-wide basis, and has not been disaggregated to individual local authority level.

Forestry Commission

27. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the future of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Munro: I have nothing to add at this stage to the statement to the House by my right hon. Friend on 19 July 1994 and the command paper "Our Forests—The Way Ahead" published in August, which explained the Government's proposals in greater detail. We have invited views on our proposals. These should be submitted by 18 November.

Economy

28. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish economy.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish economy is advancing on a broad front. Output is increasing across a range of sectors and exports are at a record level. Unemployment has been falling and the September level was the lowest for three years. The latest business survey evidence points to continued confidence in virtually all sectors and to increasing investment expectations on the part of manufacturers. Business forecasts predict continuing steady growth this year and next. These positive trends are greatly to be welcomed and amply demonstrate the success of the Government's policies for the economy.

Hardwood Trees

29. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what acreage of hardwood trees is felled on average each year; and what is the rate of re-planting.

Sir Hector Monro: No record is kept of the area of broadleaved woodlands which is felled each year. Nevertheless, the felling of woodland in Britain is controlled through felling licences and the woodland grant scheme. These ensure that practically all felled woodland is replanted, and that broadleaved woodland is replanted with broadleaved trees.

Water Charges

30. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about water charges.

Mr. Stewart: Water charges have risen in recent years and will continue to do so to finance the new investment of some £5 billion needed for water and sewerage over the next 15 years or so. The new structure for Scottish water and sewerage services proposed in the Local Government etc (Scotland) Bill is designed to keep increases as low as possible. The three new public authorities will be expected to secure economies of scale and maximise operational efficiency.

Hospital Beds

31. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the number of hospital beds in Glasgow will be sufficient for future needs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for Greater Glasgow health board in consultation with the NHS trusts in its area to assess the volume of service for the Glasgow population in consideration of a needs assessment of the current and future needs of the local population.

"Higher Still: Opportunity for All"

32. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with regard to the implementation of the proposals contained in his document, "Higher Still: Opportunity for All".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Good progress is being made. The committee structure which will deliver the new system of courses and awards for upper secondary education in Scotland is now in place and has commenced its work. In addition, a development unit has been established to co-ordinate development activities.

Housing

33. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of tenants groups to discuss housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet tenants' organisations to discuss housing in Scotland but I often meet tenants in the course of my housing visits to local authorities throughout Scotland.

Unemployment

34. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the change in the number of unemployed in Scotland since December 1992.

Mr. Stewart: Between December 1992 and September 1994, the seasonally adjusted level of unemployment in Scotland fell by 24,000.

Rivers

35. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on measures to combat acidification of rivers in Scotland.

Sir Hector Munro: The main source of acidification of rivers in Scotland is acid rain caused by atmospheric pollution. The Government are a signatory to the recent European sulphur protocol which binds all European countries to reduce emissions of sulphur, a significant contributor to acid rain, during the next 15 to 20 years.

Our primary vehicle for achieving reductions in emissions of acid gases from major industrial sources is the United Kingdom national plan to meet the requirements of the EC large combustion plants directive. Under this plan, Scotland is separately responsible for delivering its own reductions in emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen within specified overall UK limits.

Public Sector Jobs

36. Mr. Harry Greenaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish jobs are in the public sector; what is their cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: In 1993, public sector employment in Scotland is estimated to have been as follows: civil service 53,000; NHS 139,000; local government 304,000; HM armed forces 19,000; and national industries approximately 30,000.

The above total of 545,000 excludes employment in other central Government occupations and other public corporations. The NHS figure includes those employed in NHS trusts, but excludes medical and dental practitioners, who are treated as self-employed. The local government figures exclude those employed in further education.

An estimate of the total cost is not available

Approximately one in four workers in Scotland are in the public sector, a slightly higher proportion than in the UK as a whole. This includes part-time as well as full-time workers.

Local Government Reorganisation

37. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government reorganisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend and I are scheduled to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on 11 November as part of the normal consultation on local government finance matters. It is likely that issues relating to local government reorganisation will be discussed at that meeting.

Ports Assistance

38. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the outcome of his representations to the European Commission on the eligibility of the ports of Cairnryan and Stranraer for assistance under various EC initiatives.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: I expect that projects to develop facilities and access at the ports of Stranraer and Cairnryan will be eligible to compete for a share of the 47 million ecu to be made available to Dumfries and Galloway under objective 5b of the structural funds over the period 1994 to 1999. This follows the Government's success in securing objective 5b status for the region. The Commission have decided that the two ports will not be eligible to receive assistance under the INTERREG community initiative.

New Town Development Corporations

39. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current position on the winding up of the new town development corporations.

Mr. Stewart: The annual report of each new town development corporation for the year ending 31 March 1994 sets out progress with winding-up. Copies of the reports are available from the Library of the House. We remain committed to achieving the wind-up of East Kilbride and Glenrothes by 31 December 1995, and the other three towns by 31 December 1996, and plans to do this are in place.

Drinking Water

40. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Water Services Association and the DOE Northern Ireland in respect of the review of the EC drinking water directive; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The water industry has made my right hon. Friend aware of its views, supported by COSLA, on the review of the EC drinking water directive. The Government will take these views into account when negotiating the revision of the directive.

Forth Bridge

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultation he has carried out in respect of the environmental effects of the proposal to build a second road bridge across the River Forth.

Sir Hector Monro: The "Setting Forth" feasibility studies considered the environmental effects of a wide range of transport proposals, including a new bridge across the Forth. Full reports of the studies have been passed to Scottish Natural Heritage, local authorities and other bodies, and we look forward to receiving their detailed comments.

Traffic Regulation Orders

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the temporary traffic regulation orders for which he has authorised an extension under section 15(5) of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, as amended by the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Act 1991, stating in each case (a) the name of the authority making the order, (b) the public rights of way stopped up by the order, (c) the duration of the extension and (d) why he granted the extension.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Secretary of State for Scotland has authorised an extension under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 as amended by the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Act 1991 to one temporary traffic regulation order made by Highland regional council, which temporarily closed the U87 Wick to Noss Head road for a length of approximately 480 m for a six month period from 9 February to 9 August 1994 to allow time for him to determine the permanent Highland Regional Council (Wick Airport Road) (U87) (Stopping-up) Order 1993.

Glaucoma

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new patients with glaucoma were referred to out-patient departments for each year from 1985 until the last for which current figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not centrally available.

Health Care International

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he was first informed that Health Care International in Clydebank had financial difficulties; and what action he has taken to alleviate these difficulties.

Mr. Stewart: Officials of Locate in Scotland and Scottish Enterprise have been involved in discussions about this company's financial position over the last two months, and my right hon. Friend has been kept informed of developments.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what Government assistance has been given to Health Care International in Clydebank; and what has been its total value.

Mr. Stewart: Total assistance offered to this project amounted to some £30 million, the largest single element of which was an offer of £22 million in regional selective assistance. This relates to total investment in the project of £180 million.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie of 4 August about Health Care International in Clydebank.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State replied to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie on 21 October. I hope that he has now received that reply.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what dates in the past two years his representatives have met with, or had other contact with, representatives of Health Care International from Clydebank.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend's officials have had regular contact with the company over this period.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what way the Government's loan to Health Care International was secured.

Mr. Stewart: An unsecured loan was advanced to the company, by Scottish Enterprise, under the terms of its leg-up scheme. There has been no other loan from the Government or its agencies.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if all the intended regional selective assistance has now been paid to Health Care International in Clydebank; and what is the cash value of this assistance.

Mr. Stewart: An offer of £22 million in regional selective assistance was made to the company, not all of which has been paid.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who owns the site on which Health Care International's hospital in Clydebank is situated.

Mr. Stewart: The site is owned by the company.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Health Care International has fully paid for its hospital in Clydebank.

Mr. Stewart: This is a matter for the company.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what undertakings Health Care International have given to him about its relationship with the national health service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: HCI has consistently stated that its objective is to complement and not compete with the NHS.

The authorisation of the construction of the Clydebank hospital given in 1987 by my right hon. and learned Friend, the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) the then Secretary of State for Scotland, contained conditions about staffing, reimbursement of nurse training costs and supply of blood and blood products. A copy of the authorisation is in the Library.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to send work to (a) Health Care International and (b) other private hospitals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 October 1994]: None. Individual health boards are free to purchase health care from HCI where the hospital can offer specific medical techniques not readily available elsewhere or where the NHS sees a need for waiting lists to be reduced more quickly than the service itself is in a position to achieve. This position applies equally for all independent providers.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he received the study ordered by Health Care International from Ernst and Whinney into the size of the market for an American hospital; what conclusions he drew from its report; and when he investigated Health Care International's forecasts as to when it would achieve its capacity.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The study was undertaken in 1987 and formed part of the information on which decisions were taken concerning the hospital.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to safeguard jobs and beds at NHS hospitals in Greater Glasgow and Health Care International in Clydebank.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Greater Glasgow health board is currently preparing its strategy for acute and maternity services in Glasgow. This will outline the future level of NHS provision of services and will be subject to full public consultation. Officials of Locate in Scotland are currently engaged in unrelated discussions about the financial restructuring of HCI with a view to securing its future.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what occasions he has met the founders of Health Care International or their representatives.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend met the founders of the company or its representatives on four occasions between October 1987 and June of this year.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employers in each TEC area have been given the investors in people award; how many have made a commitment to meeting the standard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The operation in Scotland of Investors in People is the responsibility of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to the hon. Member.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department commissioned a survey of public attitudes to the reform of the ground for divorce and procedures. This survey forms part of the Government's wider consultation on these matters and was conducted by Market and Opinion Research International Ltd. during the first quarter of 1994. A national survey of court users was commissioned from PAS Ltd. In August 1994 to gauge customer satisfaction levels in the court service and to help inform the formulation of standards for future courts charters. The cost of these surveys is regarded as commercially confidential.

Commonhold Property

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to introduce legislation to provide for commonhold tenure.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government intend to introduce this legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for making:

14 appointments to executive bodies;

2,061 appointments to advisory bodies; and

20 other appointments.

He is responsible for approving 11 appointments to an advisory body.

This answer does not cover judicial appointments, the 223 quasi-judicial justices' clerks in the magistrates courts or ecclesiastical appointments. The figure for appointments to advisory bodies include 104 appointments to rule committees, where some of the membership is laid down by statute.

Senior Salaries Review Body

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how the Government intend to implement recommendation 17 of the 1994 report of the Senior Salaries Review Body.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Recommendation 17 of the 1994 report of the Senior Salaries Review Body is that the Government should seek to achieve the salary levels for the judiciary proposed in the 1992 report of the Top Salaries Review Body, plus regular uprating, by 1 April 1999. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced the findings of the Senior Salaries Review Body on 3 February 1994, Official Report, columns 848–49. The Government have decided that the recommended salary levels should be achieved by spreading the increase evenly over the next five financial years, starting with 1 April 1995 and on 1 April thereafter to 1 April 1999.

DEFENCE

Army Base Repair Organisation

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on market testing in the Army Base Repair Organisation.

Mr. Freeman: A pilot market test of 18 Base Workshops at Bovington was won by the in-house bid team earlier this year. Since then, the Army Base Repair Organisation has completed a study which has concluded that there remains an excess of workshop capacity which needs to be addressed. This overcapacity results from a range of factors including the reorganisation of work load following earlier rationalisation, a reduction in the amount of equipment in the Army, increased reliability of modern equipment and improved repair techniques. The study has recommended that activity at the base workshop at Old Dalby, Leicestershire should cease, and that its work load should be transferred to other facilities. It recommended that the district workshop at Ashford, Kent should also cease operations and that its work load should be transferred either to other ABRO facilities or to industry. The study also recommended that the ABRO's wider market-testing programme should be restructured to take account of the proposed closures and to provide more scope for innovative proposals from industry.

Our intention is to begin consultation on these proposals with the relevant trade unions as soon as possible with a view to completing the ABRO withdrawal from Ashford by late 1995 and Old Dalby by late 1996. Final decisions will be taken in the light of this consultation.

If, in the event, withdrawal from the ABRO workshop at Old Dalby is confirmed after consultation, the MOD will first seek to establish whether there is another MOD use for the site and, in the event that there is not, I will seek actively, in co-operation with the local Member of Parliament, local authorities, staff representatives and the relevant local agencies to find an alternative use for the site and its facilities.

Copies of the consultation document are being placed in the Library of the House.

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the projected capital cost of the Trident programme has been (a) spent to date and (b) committed to date.

Mr. Freeman: As at the end of June 1994, £7,401 million had been spent and £8,623 million committed on the Trident programme.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest estimate of the outstanding capital cost of the Trident programme that will remain to be spent and committed by (a) April 1996 and (b) April 1997.

Mr. Freeman: At current prices and exchange rates, estimated outstanding capital spend and commitment on the Trident programme at April 1996 will be £1,416 million and £686 million respectively. It is not our practice to provide detailed forecasts of project costs more than two years in advance. By April 1997, however, we expect outstanding spend to be in the region of £1 billion and commitment to be somewhat in excess of £400 million at today's economic conditions.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest estimate of the in-service date for the (a) second, (b) third and (c) fourth Trident submarines.

Mr. Freeman: The second Trident submarine is due to enter service towards the end of 1995 or early in 1996, the third in the late 1990s and the fourth around the turn of the century.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total expenditure to date on the purchase of the Trident D5 missiles from the United States.

Mr. Freeman: Some £596 million has been spent by the United Kingdom on the purchase of Trident D5 missiles from the United States.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Trident D5 missiles (a) have been purchased to date and (b) remain to be purchased.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom has purchased 44 Trident D5 missiles to date. Final decisions have yet to be taken on how many more missiles will be purchased.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which conventional force elements assigned to fulfil the nuclear aspects of defence role 1, "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1994", apart from the Tornado GR1s, are intended specifically to fulfil the sub-strategic role.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the specific duties of the 12 regular infantry battalions assigned to the fulfilment of the nuclear role, under defence role 1, "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1994".

Mr. Soames: The role of the 12 regular infantry battalions referred to under military task 1.1 is to provide protection to the nuclear deterrent in time of tension, crisis and war.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Soames: Expenditure by my Department on postal services during the last five years is as follows:

1989–90	12,090,996
1990–91	11,208,115
1991–92	8,511,910
1992–93	8,847,536
1993–94	8,537,031
1994–95	[1]3,745,595

[1] to 24 October 1994

The costs are for items sent through the Royal Mail and do not include the cost of providing an internal mail service within my Department.

The number of items of mail moved by the defence postal service in the last five years, based on average bag-fill factors, is as follows:

	Number
1990–91	56,607,788
1991–92	56,082,586
1992–93	37,567,378
1993–94	31,125,393
1994–95	[1]28,687,836

[1] estimate for whole year.

Maritime Rescue Co-ordination Centre

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the maritime rescue co-ordination centre at RAF Pitreavie to transfer to RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Soames: The rescue co-ordination centre at RAF Pitreavie Castle is expected to transfer to RAF Leuchars in the first quarter of 1996.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what preparations have been made and at what cost for the transfer of the maritime rescue co-ordination centre from RAF Pitreavie to RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Soames: Planning work continues within my Department to determine the optimum accommodation, communications and information systems necessary to support the national military rescue co-ordination centre at RAF Leuchars. To date, no money has been spent on the transfer.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the maritime rescue co-ordination centre at RAF Pitreavie.

Mr. Soames: I have nothing further to add to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on the defence costs study, "Front Line First", on 14 July, Official Report, column 1172.

Headquarters Transfer

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to transfer the headquarters of the air officer commanding Scotland from RAF Pitreavie to RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Soames: We propose to transfer the post of Air Officer Scotland and Northern Ireland from RAF Pitreavie Castle to RAF Leuchars in December 1995.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence approves 14 appointments to MOD executive non-departmental public bodies and 28 appointments to MOD advisory non-departmental public bodies. As for other public appointments not listed in "Public Bodies", I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member on 4 March, Official Report, column 938.

Hercules

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will delay any decision on replacement of the Hercules fleet until the result of the full feasibility study of the future large aircraft is available.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to await the results of the full feasibility study due to be available in the first quarter of 1995 by British companies for the pending order of the RAF Hercules aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: It would not be appropriate to delay a timely and cost-effective decision on the pressing operational needs of the Royal Air Force. The FLA is already being taken into account in our assessment.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the date when he will make his decision concerning the replacement or otherwise of the Hercules transporter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I hope to make an announcement on the way forward for the first tranche of the Hercules rolling replacement programme around the turn of the year.

Appropriation Accounts

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the accommodation provided to the Council of Voluntary Welfare Work, referred to in the other notes to class I, vote 1 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: A list of all accommodation made available to the Council of Voluntary Welfare Workers in British forces Germany during financial year 1993–94 is provided. The following list is divided into commercial and residential accommodation respectively.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the (a) contractor and (b) RAF leases which led to the extra-contractual payment referred to in the notes to class I, vote 1 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: It is not my Department's practice to identify individual contractors where matters of commercial confidentiality are concerned. There were no leases involved in the case in question.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the contractors and (b) the circumstances which led to an extra-contractual payment of £11,750,000, as listed in the notes to class I, vote 3 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94.

Mr. Freeman: Individual contractors are not normally identified where matters of commercial confidentiality are concerned. The contractor had submitted claims against the Department in respect of alleged failures to meet obligations to supply equipment and information. These claims were disputed. However, following legal advice, the Department agreed to accept a share of responsibility for some of the delays and increased cost. The settlement, £19,000,000 payable over two years, was for approximately half the value of the total claim.

Mr. Mundie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the gifts under £100,00 value recorded in class I, vote 2 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give (a) the name of contractor and (b) the circumstances which led to £1,175,000 payments as listed in the notes to class I, vote 3 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94; and what disciplinary action was taken.

Mr. Freeman: Individual contractors are not normally identified where matters of commercial confidentiality are concerned. Without admission of liability, a payment of £1,175,000, VAT included, was made to a contractor in respect of extra-contractual claims made against the Department. The claims were founded on the allegation that Government-furnished equipment had been provided late and in an unserviceable condition while Government-furnished facilities were not made available as planned. Disciplinary action was not considered to be appropriate in this case.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which naval base was involved and what was the gross cost of purchasing the property referred to in the order notices to class I, vote 1 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: The property referred to was purchased in connection with works at the Clyde submarine base. Some £203,500 was spent to purchase land to facilitate the construction of new mess and living accommodation at Faslane.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the type of goods which led to £1,331,000 being lost as set out in the loss statement in class I, vote 2 of the Appropriation Accounts 1993–94; and what disciplinary action was taken.

Mr. Soames: The type of goods referred to form part of the marine engineering spares inventory and are wholly or mainly manufactured of rubber. The introduction of British standard 3574 in 1987 resulted in shorter shelf and working life periods for many rubber goods held at RNSD Eaglescliffe. A review which was carried out to test all rubber components against the new British standard revealed that a number of rubber items should be classified as non-conforming stock. An exhaustive study into this matter concluded that no blame could be attached to an individual or individuals in this case.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now set up a full public inquiry into operations at the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Freeman: No. The Health and Safety Executive Review of the AWE was comprehensive and detailed. The AWE's response was published as part of the report and actions which accord with the recommendations form part of AWE's current safety development programme. A public inquiry would divert effort from the important safety improvement work now in hand.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to remove AWE's immunity from the licensing requirements of the Nuclear Installations Acts.

Mr. Freeman: Decisions will be taken in the light of discussions with the HSE on the timing and implementation of licensing.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution about safety at AWE following review by the Health and Safety Executive of AWE; and if he will ask Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to carry out a similar review of AWE and publish the results.

Mr. Freeman: The HMIP, and also the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and, in the case of AWE Cardiff, the Welsh Office, routinely monitor AWE under the provisions of the relevant environmental legislation. They are independent regulators and judge for themselves appropriate timing for reviews and audits.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has made to the recommendation made by the director general of the Health and Safety Executive in his recent report on the safety of atomic weapons establishments in respect of Crown immunity; and when and in what form, he expects to respond to the other recommendations.

Mr. Freeman: As I said to the House on 18 October 1994 during the defence debate, Official Report, column 240, we accept in principle the argument for licensing AWE Aldermaston and Burghfield under the provisions of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, subject to discussions about timing the implementation. The report's other recommendations are addressed to the operating contractor, Hunting BRAE, and its response is incorporated into the HSE's report.

Rosehearty Test Range

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for daily sound monitoring of the night-time sorties at the Rosehearty test range; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans for sound monitoring of night-time sorties at the RAF air weapons range at Rosehearty.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to extend night-time flying at the Rosehearty test range to other months of the year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to extend night flying at the RAF air weapons range at Rosehearty beyond the period, from 1 May to 31 August, already proposed.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions will be taken to protect fishing vessels in the vicinity of the Rosehearty test range following the extension to the operating times of the range; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The present regulations governing the use of the air weapons range at Rosehearty allow fishing vessels to operate safely within the range danger area both during the day and at night. No further action is therefore necessary.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for RAF officials to meet the residents of Rosehearty to discuss night-time bombing sorties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: None. Public consultation on this issue is a matter for the local council. Officials from my Department and the local council met at RAF Lossiemouth in August when the RAF requirement for extended operating hours at the air weapons range, Rosehearty, was explained in full. Council officials were given every opportunity to raise any public concerns at that meeting.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what emergency procedures have been adopted in the event of an accident at the Rosehearty test range; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The RAF requires all air weapons ranges to develop their own set of procedures for dealing with accidents in consultation with the appropriate local emergency services. Procedures in place at Rosehearty require the unit, in the event of an accident, to advise civilian emergency services and air traffic control at RAF Lossiemouth, render all possible aid at the scene of the accident and provide co-ordination assistance to the emergency and rescue services.

Pilot Training

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the possibility of simulated night-time sorties for training pilots; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A considerable amount of night-flying training is carried out by aircrew of all three services using flight simulators. As simulator technology improves, more night training will be undertaken using synthetic training devices. However, for safety and operational reasons, the requirement for some live night-flying training will always remain.

Bosnia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outbreak of dysentery at Vitez army camp in Bosnia; whether the source of infection has been identified; and what action has been taken to eradicate it.

Mr. Soames: Between July and September 1994, some 250 soldiers in Vitez and the surrounding areas reported sick with diarrhoea. In the majority of cases no causative organism was identified, although some specimens revealed a mix of organisms including salmonella and shigella. No specific source was identified but the in-theatre British military environmental health inspector believed contributing factors to be: damaged sewage systems and inadequately maintained waste disposal facilities in the surrounding area; faecal contamination of a river running through the camp; hot water; a high incidence of disease-carrying insects; and poor hygiene practices among the troops.

As a result of his report, structural improvements were made to waste disposal systems, fly proofing was installed, food-handling and storage practices reinforced, water purification processes were checked and a theatre-wide campaign aimed at improving personal hygiene was introduced. The number of cases peaked in August and there have been no cases reported so far this month.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the level of expenditure by RAF Finningley on supplies and services from the local area.

Mr. Soames: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the (a) total and (b) mean annual salary cost of service personnel located at RAF Finningley.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what developments, improvements, equipment upgrades or other physical works have been undertaken at RAF Finningley in the past five years; and what has been the cost of each of these works projects.

Mr. Soames: Details of works expenditure at RAF Finningley for financial years 1990–91 to 1994–95 are as follows:

Property Management (including maintenance and minor works)	12,808,000
Officer Married Quarter refurbishment	5,200,000
New Air Navigation School	4,660,000
Airman Married Quarter refurbishment	4,600,000
Barrack Block refurbishment	1,242,000
Supply Hanger	772,000
New Motor Transport Facility	745,000
100 Squadron Accommodation	580,000
Station Heating upgrade	274,000
Total	30,881,000

These figures include estimated expenditure of £2,423,000 for the current financial year.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the existing facilities at RAF Finningley could be used for civilian aviation purposes.

Mr. Soames: If the proposed closure of RAF Finningley goes ahead, and the site is disposed of, the runway, taxiway, hangarage, parking and handling areas could, subject to planning approval, be used for civilian aviation purposes.

Fixtures such as radar and air traffic control equipment would be removed by the RAF prior to disposal. If the RAF continued to use Finningley as at present, and capacity for civil use of the airfield was identified, only the runway and taxiway would be available for use by civil aircraft on a regular basis.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what improvement works are required at other bases to which it is proposed that existing RAF Finningley activities will transfer in order that the facilities at RAF Finningley are matched; at which RAF stations the works are required; and what is the estimated cost of these improvement works.

Mr. Soames: The detail requested will be covered in a consultative document concerning the proposed closure of RAF Finningley. That document will fully explain the rationale behind the proposal, including financial considerations, and will be issued shortly.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each, the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Period	Commissioned by	Subject
1992
November	Army	ACIO Research
December	Army	Army Officer Creative Development Research
1993
March	RAF	Recruitment Advertising Strategy Research
May	Army	Officer Advertising, Creative Development Research
December	MoD	NECL Creative Development Research
December	Army	Soldier Slogan Research

May	Army	Slogan Confirmation and Creative Development Research
June	Army	Army Recruitment Targeting Research
June	RN	Asians Language and Communication Survey
August	MoD	NECL Tracking—Autumn 94
September	Army	Army Recruiting Advertising Tracking

The objectives of the research are to monitor the effectiveness of advertising and attitudes of members of the public towards a career in the armed forces. The cost of the studies and the name of the successful contractor is commercially confidential information.

The commissioning of public opinion surveys by my Department's agencies is a matter for the chief executives of those agencies. I can confirm, however, that none of the chief executives has commissioned such work since 1 October 1992.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to introduce height-recording equipment in all fast jets included in low-level and ultra-low level training flights.

Mr. Soames: We have no plans to introduce such equipment.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to date for the decommissioning of each nuclear-powered submarine withdrawn from service; and what information his Department has sought from the Defence Ministries of the United States, France and Russia on their respective experience in such submarine reactor cores and hulls.

Mr. Freeman: The approximate costs of undertaking the defuelling, de-equipping and lay-up preparation process for those nuclear-powered submarines which have been taken out of service to date are as follows:

Submarine	DDLP costs £ million
HMS Swiftsure	11·5
HMS Warspite	11·3
HMS Churchill	11·2
HMS Conqueror	10·6
HMS Courageous	10·8
HMS Revenge (SSBN)	18·7
HMS Valiant and HMS Resolution have not started their DDLP process yet.

Those costs do not include the costs of final disposal, the policy for which is still under consideration. It is also not possible to provide costs on the decommissioning of HMS Dreadnought, which was the first nuclear submarine to be withdrawn from service in 1982 and the information requested, in so far as it may be available, could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

A regular exchange of information between the United States and the United Kingdom Governments continues on all nuclear matters under the 1958 mutual defence agreement. No detailed discussions have taken place with France or Russia on these matters.

Gordon Foxley

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has undertaken a study of the costs to the Government arising from acts of corruption for which Gordon Foxley has been convicted.

Mr. Freeman: My Department's study of Gordon Foxley's corrupt activities has been unable to establish specific costs to the Government arising from these.

South Africa

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Government of South Africa regarding allegations of sales of arms by British companies to the former South African Government in breach of the United Nations arms embargo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Ministry of Defence Headquarters

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the costs of constructing the new MOD headquarters at Abbey Wood; and what are the expected running costs.

Mr. Freeman: The estimated works cost of the Abbey Wood development, inclusive of site acquisition, construction, fitting out, professional works management fees and VAT is £254·136 million at 1993 prices. The construction programme continues to proceed within budget and against the planned time scale, which remains tight. Phased occupation of the accommodation is targeted to commence in autumn 1995, with the aim of completing by autumn 1996.

We are in the process of inviting bids for facilities management at Abbey Wood. The core facilities management costs are projected to achieve savings in excess of 40 per cent. compared to existing accommodation, with energy costs estimated at one third of those for typical modern buildings.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what conclusions for United Kingdom policy he has drawn from the recent report commissioned by the United States Department of Defence concerning the military utility of anti-personnel mines to the United States armed forces;

(2) whether Her Majesty's Government will commission a report on the military utility of anti-personnel mines for the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: We are not aware of any specific United States Government report concerning the military utility of anti-personnel mines for the United States armed forces. The need for, and the role of, land mines for the United Kingdom armed forces is assessed as part of overall military strategy.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of Her Majesty's armed forces have been (a) killed and (b) injured by anti-personnel mines since 1980; in which countries, and with what effects on operations in which British armed forces have been involved.

Mr. Soames: Precise data are not available on the individual weapons systems responsible for deaths and injuries of service personnel.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research he has conducted into the impact of anti-personnel mines on civilian populations; and what conclusions he reached.

Mr. Freeman: No such research has been carried out by the Ministry of Defence. The use of anti-personnel land mines by United Kingdom armed forces is fully in accordance with the laws of war, which prohibit the use of land mines against civilians.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research he has conducted on the failure rates of anti-personnel mines with self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms; and if he will publish specific details of failure rates and the general conclusions of the research.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 18 April 1994, Official Report, column 416.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research he has conducted to compare the levels of military utility to the United Kingdom armed forces of anti-personnel mines and anti-tank mines; and with what conclusions.

Mr. Freeman: Anti-personnel mines and anti-tank mines have separate roles although they are often laid within the same area. The anti-tank mine is intended to prevent physically the passage of military vehicles with consequential effect on the enemy's fighting capability. Anti-personnel mines are intended to lower the enemy's general effectiveness. Consequently, the military utility of the two cannot be compared to useful advantage.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: In respect of his ministerial responsibilities, my right hon. Friend is responsible for making 95 appointments to six executive bodies and 53 appointments on five advisory bodies. Ten further appointments to an advisory body require his approval. All of these are listed in "Public Bodies".

In respect of his non-ministerial responsibilities for the Duchy of Lancaster, the Chancellor is also responsible for 186 appointments to 21 advisory bodies, and six appointments with a historical connection. These are not listed in "Public Bodies".

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total number of public appointments made by Ministers, or requiring their approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (a) appointments to executive bodies, (b) appointments to advisory bodies and (c) other appointments.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: There are 42,606 public appointments listed in "Public Bodies 1993". Of these, 4,116 are appointments to executive bodies, 10,022 are appointments to advisory bodies, and 28,468 are other appointments such as those made to tribunals and NHS bodies. Statistical information is not held centrally about other appointments not listed in "Public Bodies" which include the posts of utility regulators, and non-executive appointments to agency and departmental management boards.

Official Report

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the price per copy, in (a) real and (b) current prices of a daily copy of the Official Report in 1970, what it is at present; what has been the percentage change in the price since 1970; and what has been the change in the retail prices index over the same period.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The price of House of Commons daily Hansard in 1970 was 2s 3d, which adjusted by the percentage change in the retail prices index of 787 per cent. is equivalent to 87p today; the price since 1991 has been £7.50. The 1970 price was heavily subsidised by the taxpayer, and this is no longer the case. HMSO announced last year that prices for routine parliamentary publications, including the Official Report, would not be increased during the life of the present Parliament.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to meet the officers of the Hansard Society to discuss their report on the decline in the sales of Hansard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have no such plans.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to achieve maximum distribution of the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Market research on the prospects for increasing sales of the Official Report has recently been undertaken by MORI on behalf of HMSO. The findings are currently under consideration.

Telephone Information Lines

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many telephone information lines have been established under the auspices of the citizens charter; and how many of these are currently in operation.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Many public service organisations have set up and run their own telephone information lines to ensure that their customers can make easy contact with them. The Office of Public Service and Science does not hold central records of all these lines, but is aware of Government helplines in the following sectors:

TREASURY

Vineyards

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will pay a visit to an English vineyard to discuss what steps he can take to better help the commercial vineyards in the United Kingdom in relation to harmonisation of the tax regime.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to visit an English vineyard at present, but he is fully aware of the concerns of the industry.

Income Levels

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the changes in disparities in income level over the last decade.

Sir George Young: Since 1979, real incomes have increased by an average of 36 per cent. Some groups have done even better—real incomes of pensioner couples are up 56 per cent.—but there have been gains for all groups.

VAT

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to impose value added tax on private medical insurance, university or college fees, school fees, school lunches or other charges levied by the state or private schools.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I cannot anticipate the Budget statement by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received concerning the extension of VAT to public transport.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer receives many representations on a wide range of issues in the run-up to the Budget.

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has to end the exemption of goods and services from VAT.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Tax changes are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor in his Budget. However, the range of goods and services which member states exempt from VAT is covered by Community law. Most are mandatory exemptions, but member states have the option to extend certain exemptions to non-profit making bodies, subject to certain conditions.

Mr. Gunnell : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional income he will gain in a full year from increasing VAT on fuel to 17½ per cent.; and what its effect will be on the weekly household bills of a family of four.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Application of the standard rate of VAT to domestic fuel and power will yield around an additional £1·5 billion in a full year. The impact on fuel bills will depend on fuel prices and on what happens to spending patterns.

Economic Growth

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the growth of the United Kingdom economy in the first three quarters of calendar year 1994.

Mr. Aitken: In the first three quarters of 1994, gross domestic product was 3½ per cent. up on the same period a year earlier. We are now seeing a highly favourable combination of strong growth and low inflation, with underlying inflation at a 27-year low.

Financial Products

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about different fiscal treatment of financial products in the United Kingdom and elsewhere in Europe.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a large number of representations from organisations and individuals on a wide variety of subjects, as is customary in the run-up to the Budget.

Tax Cuts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average amount each of the top 1 per cent. earners in the United Kingdom has received in tax cuts since 1979.

Sir George Young: A calculation of the tax change for those who are currently in the top 1 per cent. of earners would require extensive information on their income levels and tax reliefs over the period since 1979. Since such information is not centrally available it is not possible to estimate an average figure.

Demand

Sir David Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the levels of total demand in the economy.

Mr. Aitken: The most recent figures for total domestic demand relate to the second quarter of 1994. By then, demand had risen for nine consecutive quarters, to a level exceeding its previous peak in the second quarter of 1990.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross domestic product is taken by public expenditure; and what the figure was in 1979.

Mr. Aitken: General Government expenditure excluding privatisation proceeds as a percentage of GDP was 44 in 1979–80 and 44.25 in 1993–94.

Tax Burdens

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the tax burden of a married couple on average earnings, with a £30,000 mortgage and two children.

Sir George Young: Real take-home pay, after tax, for this group has increased by around £83 a week since 1978–79 compared with an increase of less than £2 a week between 1973–74 and 1978–79.

EU Budget

Ms Jowell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effects of fraud and waste in the European Union budget.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Fraud and waste in the Community budget is at an unacceptably high level and brings the Union into disrepute. It is essential that member states and Community institutions alike intensify their efforts to deal with it. The United Kingdom will continue to take the lead in the fight against fraud in the Community.

In March, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary announced a joint action proposal, under title VI of the treaty on European Union, to combat serious fraud against the Community budget. The Commission has also recently presented two proposals to the Council designed to reinforce the protection of the Community's financial interests. Those proposals and the United Kingdom's proposal are under consideration in the Council.

Budget Representations

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received suggesting proposals for his forthcoming Budget.

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a large number of representations from organisations and individuals, as is customary in the run-up to the Budget.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new proposals he has to safeguard the jobs at the Central Statistical Office in London and Newport.

Mr. Nelson: The Central Statistical Office publishes annually its future staffing estimates in its "Programme Strategies". The most recent relate to the period 1994–95 to 1996–97. These plans are rolled forward each year and are revised in line with changes in expenditure provision and business needs.

Tax Changes

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the relationship between tax changes and the incidence of poverty in the United Kingdom.

Sir George Young: Since 1979, real incomes have increased for all economic groups. The policies of sound finance now being pursued will produce sustained recovery, more jobs and further increases in living standards.

Postage

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nelson: Expenditure by HM Treasury on postage for 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 to date was £67,612, £73,104 and £28,238 respectively.

The number of items posted for 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 to date was 311,010, 355,908 and 155,602.

The information for earlier years is incomplete and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tiger Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of tiger products and material containing tiger products seized by HM Customs and Excise in each of the last five years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: HM Customs and Excise made the following seizures over the period.

1989

Musk and tiger plaster— 2packets.

Tiger bone tablets—number not known.

1990

1991

Tiger skin handbag—1.

Tiger bone plasters—22.

Lion and tiger claws—13.

Tincture of tiger bone—20 x 70cl bottles.

Tiger bones—number not known.

Pension Transfers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost of compensation to (a) public funds and (b) pension companies for pension transfers based on bad advice; what assessment he has made as to whether compensation from pension funds will be paid in full; and what representations he has received regarding the sources from which it should be paid.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 25 October Official Report, columns 507–10.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Nelson: Expenditure by HM Treasury on official hospitality for 1990–91 was £51,424; for 1991–92, £85,873; for 1992–93, £303,523; for 1993–94, £74,007; and spend to date in 1994–95, £27,732.

The large increase in 1992–93 results from a number of one-off events including the informal meeting of the Economic and Finance Council during the United Kingdom presidency and the International Organisation for Securities Commissions conference.

Expenditure by the agencies for 1990–91 was £44,832; for 1991–92, £45,955; for 1992–93, £36,593; for 1993–94, £53,051 and for 1994–95 to date £16,600.

Public Appointments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public appointments for which he is responsible (a) in the west midlands region and (b) in Shropshire, indicating in each case the duration of the appointment, the date when a new appointment is due, and the salary.

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible for six public appointments in the west midlands region and one in Shropshire. All appointments are to VAT tribunals. The duration of each appointment is three years. Of the appointments in the west midlands region one new appointment is due on 1 October 1995; three on 1 October 1996 and two on 1 October 1997. A new appointment is due in Shropshire on 1 October 1997. All appointees are paid a daily fee when they sit, which is currently set at £149.

Tobacco and Alcohol

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the average price of (a) cigarettes, (b) cigars and (c) rolling tobacco in each EU country; and what percentage of that price is excise, VAT or other tax;

(2) what are the rates of excise duty and VAT on tobacco products in each EU country; and what is the difference in each case from United Kingdom levels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The most popular price category for cigarettes, cigars and hand-rolling tobacco in each EU country and the excise and VAT elements of those prices are shown in the tables. Average prices of these products in other EU countries are not available.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the life expectancy for (a) men and (b) women in each year since 1979 in each EU country.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested—as far as it is available from publications of the Statistical Office of the European Communities and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys—is as follows.

In some cases the expectation is given for the two-year period beginning with the year in the table heading and in some cases for the three-year period centred on the year in the heading.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Nelson: No record is kept of how long it takes to adjust clocks in the Treasury. Members of staff adjust clocks in their own rooms and would spend no more than a few seconds on this procedure.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Sproat: My Department has not conducted any public opinion surveys since October 1992.

Since 1988, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency has undertaken an annual summer visitor survey, to provide valid and reliable research data to inform management decisions regarding the development of visitor facilities. In 1993 the survey was conducted by MEW Research and in 1994 by CC&C Research Ltd. In addition, HRPA has also commissioned research among visitors to monitor performance in relation to its visitors charters. In 1992–93 the research was conducted by Numbers M R Ltd. and from then on by Vital Statistics.

The Royal Parks Agency has commissioned the centre for leisure and tourism studies at the university of North London to undertake market research on all royal parks over a three-year period starting in January 1994. The survey is designed to obtain a visitor profile and seek visitors' views on services and facilities available in the parks.

The fees paid for those surveys are a matter of commercial confidentiality and therefore cannot be disclosed.

Departmental Accommodation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the cost to date to his Department of the leasing of property for his Department's use from the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Sproat: The rents paid for Government offices are a commercial-in-confidence matter between the Government and their landlords.

Since my Department was established in April 1992, we have paid £692,057 to Property Holdings in respect of service charges for all Department of National Heritage properties.

Postage

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sproat: Although my Department was established in April 1992, we did not become responsible for our own postage until we moved into our new headquarters in May 1993. Since then, a total of £51,426 has been spent on postage. On average we post about 8,000 items a month.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Newton: Expenditure by the Privy Council Office in respect of official hospitality for the years in question was as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1990–91	4,450
1991–92	7,234
1992–93	9,776
1993–94	9,892
1994–95 to date	2,309

I am not responsible for any agencies.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Goodlad: One opinion survey has been conducted on behalf of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office since 1 October 1992. This was carried out by Gallup from 26 to 31 January 1994 and the objective was to learn about attitudes in the United Kingdom to Bosnia. The fee paid to Gallup was £1,292.50.

No surveys have been commissioned by FCO agencies.

Indonesia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure before any contracts are agreed between Her Majesty's Government and Indonesia for the procurement of any military equipment by Indonesia from the United Kingdom that inquiries are made to ascertain whether the International Labour Organisation convention of 1956 concerning the right to associate in free trade unions is being observed in Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: A country's human rights record is one of the criteria we take into account when considering licence applications for the export of military equipment. There is no ILO convention of 1956 concerning the right to associate in free trade unions.

Negative Security Assurance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals his Department intends to submit to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty extension conference regarding the strengthening of the United Kingdom's negative security assurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom, in common with other nuclear weapons states, has given a general assurance to all non-nuclear weapons states parties to the non-proliferation treaty that we will not use or threaten to use our nuclear weapons against them except in the case of an attack on the United Kingdom, its dependent territories, armed forces or allies by such a state acting in alliance with a nuclear weapons state. The same assurance applies to states not party to the non-proliferation treaty but which have made similar internationally binding commitments not to manufacture or acquire nuclear weapons.

In the context of the non-proliferation treaty extension conference in 1995, a number of states parties have asked that the nuclear weapon states give new and enhanced assurances. We are discussing this with the other nuclear weapons states in the hope of agreeing a common approach.

Turkey

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding (a) the imprisonment and trial of eight Kurdish Members of Parliament by the Turkish Government and (b) the six Kurdish Members of Parliament currently in exile in Brussels.

Mr. Goodlad: We have made clear to the Turkish Government our strong concern about the action taken against the Members of Parliament of the banned Democracy party. We continue to take every opportunity to remind the Turkish Government of the need for improvement in Turkey's human rights record in general. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised the issue with Mrs. Ciller in Istanbul on 14 October.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he expects will be the outcome of Turkey's application to enter the European customs union; and to what extent it will depend on Turkey's human rights practices regarding the Kurds.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom is contributing positively to the negotiations between Turkey and the EU to achieve customs union. The Turkish Government are aware of the United Kingdom concerns, shared by European partners, about human rights abuses in Turkey, but there is no direct link between the process of moving towards customs union with Turkey and Turkey's human rights record.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what outbreaks of cholera have been reported to the World Health Organisation by Turkey.

Mr. Goodlad: No cases of cholera have been reported to the World Health Organisation by Turkey for the last two years.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether future sales of miliary equipment to Turkey by NATO will be made contingent upon Turkey improving its human rights record with particular reference to Kurdish minorities.

Mr. Goodlad: Turkey is a NATO member with genuine external defence requirements. United Kingdom defence sales to Turkey are considered on a case-by-case basis. Arms which are likely to be used for internal repression are not granted licences.

Postage

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO expenditure on postage during the past five years, with ODA expenditure stated separately, has been:

Year	FCO		ODA
	Cost £	Number of Items	Cost £	Number of Items
1989–90	153,767	n/a	91,867	202,638
1990–91	133,281	n/a	116,514	236,185
1991–92	154,785	n/a	161,304	303,886
1992–93	169,321	n/a	153,374	282,269
1993–94	174,104	n/a	124,904	205,300

The number of items sent by the FCO has not been recorded during the period ending 31 March 1994. Records maintained since that date show that the number of items sent to the end of September was 268,460.

British Embassies

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. (1) if he will publish the rules governing expenditure which may legitimately be incurred by British embassies on visits made abroad in a private capacity by British citizens;

(2) what expenditure has been incurred by British embassies in the last five full financial years, and in the current financial year, to date in connection with private visits by British citizens.

Mr. Baldry: British embassies incur expenditure in connection with a large range of British private visitors including commercial visitors. It is not possible to identify that proportion of an embassy's overall expenditure which is used for these purposes.

China

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise allegations of torture in prisons in China, in (a) the European Union and (b) the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: At this year's United Nations Commission on Human Rights, the European Union expressed its concern at reports of torture in China and called on China to co-operate with the special rapporteur on torture. It looks to China to fulfil its obligations under the convention against torture. We will continue to raise human rights in China with the Chinese authorities and in international forums at every suitable opportunity.

Siberian Tiger

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make resources available to the Russian Government to assist their efforts to save the Siberian tiger.

Mr. Goolad: We have not received a request from the Russian Government to assist their efforts to save the Siberian tiger.

We have, however, given TRAFFIC International—Trade Records Analysis of Flora and Fauna in Commerce—£97,500 to carry out a study of the Asian medicinal trade and its implications for the conservation of tigers. The project aims to:

—reduce poaching and smuggling of tigers and other endangered species;

—identify illegal trade routes to consumer nations and help governments halt illegal shipments; and —identify ways to alter consumer behaviour and reduce the demand for tiger parts.

We believe that this contribution will substantially assist international efforts to stamp out the illegal trade in tigers, rhinos and other endangered species and thereby to promote their conservation.

Princess of Wales

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what were the costs to the British embassy in the USA arising from the visit of HRH The Princess of Wales in October 1994;

(2) what was the cost to his Department with particular reference to United Kingdom posts of the recent visit of the Princess of Wales to the USA.

Mr. Baldry: The recent private visit of the Princess of Wales to the USA involved costs to the embassy in Washington on entertainment, transport and staff time. The costs were part of the normal functioning of the embassy. The full costs cannot be readily identified.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he was (a) informed of or (b) authorised the expenditure incurred by the British embassy in respect of the recent visit by the Princess of Wales to the USA.

Mr. Baldry: This private visit by the Princess of Wales involved costs to the embassy, on entertainment, transport and staff time. These are part of the normal running of an embassy, within the head of mission's discretion.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is responsible for making 103 appointments, and 47 require his approval.

The breakdown requested by the hon. Member is:

Appointments to Executive Bodies
58 appointments made, 22 appointments approved

Appointments to Advisory Bodies
25 Appointments made, 25 appointments approved

Appointments to other Bodies
20 appointments made, none approved.

Taiwan

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support has been given by Her Majesty's Government to the United States Administration's decision in March to sanction Taiwan under the terms of the Pelly amendment because of that country's failure to enforce a ban on the trade in tiger products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The United States action followed the March meeting of the Standing Committee of the Convention on Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, which tasked a number of countries, including Taiwan, to take further measures to stamp out illegal trade in endangered species. We expect progress reports to be presented at the ninth conference of the parties to CITES to be held from 7 to 18 November. Once we have studied them, we will consider what, if any, action is necessary, in consultation with our European Union partners.

In June, at the instigation of the United Kingdom, European Union Environment Ministers expressed concern about pressure on tiger populations, condemned the illegal trade in tiger products and undertook to be particularly vigilant in enforcing CITES for that species. We are keeping the situation under close review.

Rights of Children

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government will be reporting to the United Nations Committee on progress towards implementation of the UN convention on the rights of children.

Mr. Goodlad: We submitted our initial report detailing progress made towards the implementation of the UN convention on the rights of the child in March this year. Copies were laid in the Libraries of both Houses.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 3 and 4 October.

Mr. Hurd: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council on 3 to 4 October. The Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis), also attended.

The Council discussed Commission and presidency proposals for the development of relations with the associated countries of central and eastern Europe. Ministers endorsed the principle of regular ministerial meetings with the CEEs and invited the Commission to prepare a White Paper on the approximation of laws.

Lord Owen briefed Ministers on the deployment of the international conference on the former Yugoslavia monitoring mission. Ministers welcomed this development and discussed how to take forward the peace process, reaffirming the importance of the contact group.

Over lunch, Italy announced its intention to continue negotiations with Slovenia following the Slovene declaration of its decision to harmonise property purchasing legislation with that of the EU. The Committee of Permanent Representatives was invited to finalise the negotiating mandate.

Over lunch, Ministers also discussed the EU's aid package for Albania, but were not able to reach agreement on its release.

The Council asked the Commission to examine a proposal for a further aid package to help the middle east peace process, and invited the Commission to make further funds available for the Palestinian police force. The Council agreed on the importance of concluding negotiations with Morocco, Tunisia and Israel for new agreements by the end of the year.

Ministers approved a presidency strategy paper on Ukraine and instructed COREPER and the political committee to prepare a draft common position within the common foreign and security policy procedure.

The Council agreed to resume negotiations with Belarus on a partnership and co-operation agreement and to institute exploratory contacts with Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaijan. Ministers requested a report on human rights in Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan before any opening of exploratory talks.

The Presidency gave an oral report of the EU/Association of South-East Asian Nations ministerial meeting in Karlsruhe.

The Council agreed the text of a draft interim agreement between the European Community and South Africa.

My Irish colleague and I briefed the Council on developments in Northern Ireland. There was a general welcome for the progress achieved and for the idea of an EU support package for the peace process.

Ministers agreed the guidelines and annex for the conference on security and co-operation in Europe review conference in Budapest — 10 October to 3 December.

Ministers agreed arrangements for the production of a report on plutonium smuggling for the Foreign Affairs Council 28 and 29 November.

The presidency reported to the Council on its discussions with the European Parliament and the Commission to resolve outstanding inter-institutional issues resulting from the implementation of a number of Maastricht provisions. These include temporary committees of inquiries, comitology, keeping the EP informed of business in the second and third pillars and the appointment of the new Commission.

In the light of the failure to agree a new global regime for outward processing trade, OPT, the Council discussed the idea—which the United Kingdom supported—of separating from the Commission's proposal those provisions allowing for the immediate exemption from the duty of OPT conducted with the CEEs. This idea did not, however, command majority support. The Council therefore invited COREPER to prepare a global regime in time for the November Foreign Affairs Council.

The Commission reported to the Council on the conclusion of multilateral negotiations on an agreement to curb subsidies to the shipbuilding sector. The Commission will bring forward a proposal for the Community to approve the agreement. A number of member states, including the United Kingdom, welcome the outcome of the negotiations, but France made clear that it had serious difficulties with the agreement as negotiated.

The Council approved the text of a draft decision to ratify the Uruguay round agreements, and agreed to seek the assent of the European Parliament on the basis of this draft. The Economic and Social Committee will also be consulted. The European Court of Justice hopes to give its opinion on the Community's competence to conclude the Uruguay round agreements by 15 November, and the aim remains to complete their national ratification procedures by the same deadline. The proposal for a code of conduct governing Community participation in the World Trade Organisation will meanwhile be considered further in COREPER: a final decision on the proposal will be taken once the European Court of Justice has ruled.

The Council also asked the Commission to prepare a report on the compatibility of the US Uruguay round implementing legislation with the World Trade Organisation agreement.

The Council endorsed the recommendations emerging from the visit of the Development Ministers troika to Rwanda and neighbouring states. These recommendations will form the basis of a common position on policy towards Rwanda.

The own-resources decision was discussed over lunch. No agreement was reached.

UN Year of Tolerance

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department will be taking to support the UN year tolerance in 1995; and what specific sums has the Government earmarked for this purpose.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 October 1994]: My Department has no plans at present to engage in specific activity to mark the UN year of tolerance in 1995: specific sums have not therefore been earmarked for such a purpose. While we are content that non-governmental organisations should play an active role in the activities of the year, it is not our policy, given heavy demands on public expenditure, to commit scarce resources to the marking of UN years dedicated to specific themes.

PRIME MINISTER

Visits

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit a state-funded children's nursery.

The Prime Minister: I plan to do so on one of my forthcoming visits around the country.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 27 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Charter Advisory Panel

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will name the members of his advisory panel on the citizens charter and the charter mark assessors.

The Prime Minister: The panel of advisers on the citizens charter is made up of people who have been appointed for their expertise in their own particular fields in the private sector. The composition of the panel is currently as follows:

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his office.

The Prime Minister: No precise record is kept of such estimates.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Howard: The readily available information, relating to headquarters postage expenditure by my Department and its agencies, except the fire service college, is as follows:

1989–90	1,959,459
1990–91	2,047,841
1991–92	2,651,686
1992–93	2,519,033
1993–94	2,993,258

The figures for 1989–90 and 1990–91 do not include the forensic science service as that information is not available.

Information on postal expenditure by regional offices, outstations and individual establishments, and on the numbers of items posted could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Howard: Details of appointments for which I am responsible are given in "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is in the Library.

I would also refer the hon. Member to my answer of 4 March, Official Report column 963, when I gave details of appointments for which I am responsible in addition to those identified in "Public Bodies" including non-executive agency and other departmental management boards.

Police Files

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to regulate the use of unused material in police files being given to the defence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 24 October, Official Report, column 465.

Byelaw Applications

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to speed up the processing of byelaw applications by his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Home Office endeavours to deal with byelaw applications as quickly as possible. I am aware that in a particular case about which my right hon. Friend made representations recently, there had been some delay; the application is now being given priority.

Tiger Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken by the Metropolitan police in respect of information passed to them in August by the World Wide Fund for Nature about the sale of tiger bone products in London.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the Commissioner of Police the Metropolis that an investigation is in progress.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if individual applications for United Kingdom citizenship are defined as operational or policy matters.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: They are not categorised in this way.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times since his appointment his advice has been sought regarding individual applications for United Kingdom citizenship.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Our records show that 10 applications for British citizenship have been referred to my right hon. and learned Friend.

Ali Al Fayed

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he and his predecessors have received in regard to the granting of British citizenship to Mr. Ali Al Fayed; and when and from whom they were received.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend and his predecessor have received representations from five people concerning Mr. Ali Al Fayed's application. It is not our practice to disclose details of private communications.

Firearms

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have adopted the recommendations of best practice identified in the working group report on firearms licensing.

Mr. Maclean: All police forces are fully aware of the recommendations made by a Home Office working group in 1991. The extent to which forces follow the detail of these recommendations is regularly monitored by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. I am satisfied that they are widely complied with.

Homicide Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the annual rate of infant, neonate and childhood homicide in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: The readily available information which relates to offences currently recorded as homicide for the years 1982 to 1992, where the age of the victim was under one year, from one to under five years, and from five to under 16 years is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1992" (Cm 2410), chapter 4 and table 4.6.

A copy of this publication is in the Library.

Provisional figures for 1993 are as follows:

Offences currently recorded as homicide in England and Wales

Victim aged under 1 year and under 5 years	29
Victim aged 5 years and under 16 years	16

Fountain Pens

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks have been made by his Department on the importation into the United Kingdom of fountain pens that conceal a 4 inch blade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No checks are made on the importation of these items. They are not among weapons which it is an offence to import.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total expenditure per English and Welsh local authority under section 11 for each year since 1992 and the current year to date; and what proportion of this was borne by his Department and by the local authority concerned.

Mr. Nicholas Baker [holding answer 26 October 1994]: Readily available information is shown in the table. This lists all authorities in England and Wales with section 11 projects approved for funding since 1 April 1992, including those which, since 1 April 1994, have received such funding from the Department of the Environment's single regeneration budget.

The figures for 1992–93 and 1993–94 are for grant claimed in relation to authorities' expenditure within those financial years, when grant was normally paid at a set rate of 75 per cent. of authorities' expenditure.

The figures for 1994–95 show the grant allocation which has been notified to each authority provided that the authority's own expenditure within this financial year is not less than the minimum figure indicated.

Notes

1. Since currently approved projects came into effect on 1 April 1992, a number of schools which were previously covered by local authority projects but which have since opted for grant maintained status have chosen to set up their own project funded directly under section 11.

2. Since 1 April 1993, most further education colleges, and a small number of sixth form colleges, which previously benefited from section 11 funding paid to the local education authority have begun receiving grant direct.

3. Some projects approved with effect from 1 April 1992 were, in the light of their particular circumstances, approved for periods of 2 years or less.

4. Some projects approved with effect from 1 April 1992 were, in the light of their particular circumstances, made subject to a tapering rate of grant (ie, in the case of a 3-year project, 75 per cent. in year 1, 60 per cent. in year 2, and 40 per cent. in year 3).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Dip

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in research to find an alternative to organo-phosphorous sheep dips.

Mrs. Browning: Alternatives to organo-phosphorous sheep dips are already licensed for use in the United Kingdom. They include flumethrin dips, as well as pour-on and injectable products. The development and marketing of alternative products is a matter for the commercial judgment of the manufacturers concerned. The veterinary medicines directorate will do all that it can to complete the assessment of any such products as quickly as possible.

Sheep Quotas

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in resolving difficulties about allocating sheep quotas to those involved or previously involved in farming partnerships.

Mr. Jack: Producers involved in partnerships will be able to lease quota within the group, for up to three years, during the second transfer and lease periods for 1993 and 1994. This will enable them to redistribute quota to match their stock holding. The second transfer and lease periods will open when all allocations from the national reserve for the relevant year have been made. For the longer term, following pressure from the United Kingdom, we expect the European Commission shortly to bring forward proposals which would, under certain circumstances, exempt transfers of quota within producer groups or partnerships from the operation of the siphon.

Bovine Semen

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what has been the cost to the United Kingdom dairy and beef cattle industry of the ban on importation of semen;

(2) if he will list those countries that prohibit the importation of semen from the United Kingdom herd; and from what date in each case the prohibition applied.

Mrs. Browning: The following countries prohibit the importation of bovine semen collected in the United Kingdom.

Country	Effective date of prohibition or date notified
Argentina	13 August 1991
Australia	1 December 1988
Austria	30 May 1990
Bulgaria	September 1994
China	4 September 1990
Costa Rica	23 March 1992
Indonesia	10 March 1993
Iran	26 July 1989
Jamaica	11 August 1994
Japan	July 1990
Malaysia (Sarawak only)	February 1991
Mexico	23 October 1992
Russian Federation	10 April 1990
Sweden	21 October 1988
Taiwan	21 February 1991
United Arab Emirates	30 June 1990
Uruguay	9 July 1990

It is not possible to quantify the cost to the United Kingdom dairy and beef cattle industry of these problems.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has that the BSE agent can be found in the offal of calves under the age of six months.

Mrs. Browning: There is no scientific evidence that BSE agent can be detected in offals from naturally infected calves under six months of age.

However, on 30 June 1994 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education announced preliminary results from a pathogenesis study in cattle. These showed detectable infectivity in the terminal ileum of calves six months after experimental oral challenge at the age of four months with a large dose of brain material from confirmed BSE cases. After careful consideration of these results Ministers decided, as a precautionary measure, to extend the specified bovine offals ban to include the thymus and intestine of all calves presented for slaughter for human consumption. Legislation to enact this will come into force on 2 November 1994.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to allow planting of short rotation coppice in environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Jack: Entry into the environmentally sensitive area scheme is voluntary. In cases where farmers in an environmentally sensitive area do opt to enter into an agreement with the Ministry to manage their land in an environmentally friendly way, the test of whether to allow the planting of short rotation coppice on such land would be whether its proposed extent and location would be compatible with the landscape objectives of the scheme.

Farmers within the area of a designated ESA who do not enter into such an agreement are free to plant short rotation coppice on their holding.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Departmental, including regional service centres, expenditure on postage in the last five years has been:

Year	£
1989–90	1,746,325
1990–91	1,867,217
1991–92	1,984,450
1992–93	2,232,975
1993–94	2,577,039

We do not maintain records of the number of items posted. They run to many thousands per week and include individual letters, mail shots and press releases.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Jack: Information about ministerial appointments to public bodies sponsored by the Ministry are given in "Public Bodies 1993". Except where otherwise stated in that publication, appointments are made by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food either solely, or jointly with the Ministers of other Departments. On appointments to bodies not listed in "Public Bodies", I have nothing to add to my reply to the honourable Gentleman of 3 March 1994, Official Report, column 811.

Badger-related TB

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) of 8 December, Official Report, column 260, what progress has been made in introducing the test for tuberculosis in the live badger announced as part of a package of measures to address the problem of badger-related TB breakdowns in cattle.

Mr. Browning: We have undertaken four pilot trials of the new badger control strategy based on the live test and have discussed these with the consultative panel on badgers and bovine tuberculosis. The original proposal envisaged three approaches: no action at all against badgers; the continuation of the existing interim strategy of trapping and killing badgers on the farm or part of the farm where the disease outbreak occurred; and finally the continuation of the interim strategy on the breakdown farm and an extension beyond the farm to apply the live test and to trap and test badgers on neighbouring farms. The trapping and testing would be carried out on a sett-by-sett basis; where a sett is found to contain one or more badgers positive to TB in the test, the positive badgers and any other badgers caught from that sett will be killed. Setts which test negative will not be disturbed.

On the basis of the views expressed by members of the consultative panel, Ministers have decided that, in cases where the live test is applied on neighbouring farms it would be more appropriate to apply the live test on the breakdown farm instead of the interim strategy. The live test will be used on the same basis as on the neighbouring farms and will result in fewer badgers being killed.

The other elements of the strategy will remain. In particular no action will be taken where there is no evidence to suggest that the original breakdown in the cattle herd was related to badgers, and the policy of not killing any lactating sows which are trapped because of the resulting impact on the cubs, which are dependent on her, will also remain. The strategy on the revised basis will start to apply from 1 November.

Milk

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report those articles of treaties of the European Community and consequential regulations and directives that render illegal reintroduction of the arrangements for collection, processing, distribution and sale of liquid fresh milk extract in the United Kingdom in 1972.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 17 October 1994]: The European Court has ruled that national legislation designed to promote and encourage the establishment of a uniform producer price for milk, by agreement or by authority, at the national or regional level is, by its nature, outside the bounds of the powers given to member states and runs contrary to the principle established by Council regulation 804/68, in particular article 3, of attaining a target price for the milk sold by Community producers during the milk year on the Community market and on external markets. EC Council regulations 1421/78 and 1422/78, as an exception to this principle, provided a legal framework for the continued authorisation of the milk marketing schemes in certain defined circumstances and subject to a number of conditions. While in theory the reintroduction of a milk marketing scheme would be possible under these regulations, in practice any move in this direction would be likely to be met by a proposal from the Commission to the Council for the revocation of the regulations in question.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest figures for the numbers of cattle infected with tuberculosis shown by MAFF administrative area, and the figures for 1979, 1984, and 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs Browning [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The total numbers of confirmed cases in each animal health office administrative area in 1989 and for the first six months of 1994 were as follows:

	1989	1994 (First 6 months)
South West England
Cornwall	57	86

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Jack: No individual record is kept of such activities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Committees

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the functions and objectives of (a) the Advanced Manufacturing Technology Committee, (b) the Advisory Committee for Arbitration Law, (c) the Aviation Committee, (d) the fuel cell advisory panel and (e) the Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property.

Mr. Heseltine: The Advanced Manufacturing Technology Committee is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The current functions and objectives of the departmental Advisory Committee on Arbitration Law are to examine the operation of the Arbitration Acts 1950 to 1979 in the light of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law model law on international commercial arbitration and to recommend to the Secretary of State any legislative or other steps which the committee considers should be taken to improve the system of arbitration in England and Wales.

The objective of the Aviation Committee is to advise the Department of Trade and Industry on the needs of the United Kingdom aeronautics industry so that these may be taken into account by Government when developing and implementing policies affecting the industry.

In particular, the Aviation Committee will advise the Department on:

(a) the factors influencing competitiveness at home and abroad;

(b) innovation programmes affecting the industry, including Civil Aircraft Research and Demonstration Programme (CARAD); and

(c) on the identification and pursuit of strategic market opportunities.

The terms of reference for the fuel cell advisory panel are:

(i) to advise the Department of Trade and Industry and its agent, the Energy Technology Support Unit (ETSU), in developing and formulating, against programme aims and objectives set by the Department of Trade and Industry, programme plans for the Department's Advanced Fuel Cell R and D programme;

(ii) in the light of the agreed programme, to advise the Department of Trade and Industry and its agent, ETSU, on the merits of Advanced Fuel R and D proposals and to make recommendations on the funding of individual projects which are submitted to the Panel;

(iii) to monitor progress on the Advanced Fuel Cell R and D programme against agreed plans and to evaluate its effectiveness in achieving the agreed objectives;

(iv) to provide a forum for reviewing progress with the research and development of advanced fuel cells, for identifying future requirements and co-ordinating United Kingdom activity in this field.

The Standing Advisory Committee on Industrial Property advises Government on the whole range of industrial property matters. Membership of the committee is drawn from organisations representing a broad range of industrial, commercial, professional and academic interests.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the Advanced Manufacturing Technology Committee in each of the last three years.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have been asked to reply, as responsibility for servicing the Advanced Manufacturing Technology Committee rested with the Science and Engineering Research Council before the committee was disbanded on 31 March 1994.

	1992	1993	1994

The AMTC was a joint committee of the Department of Trade and Industry and the SERC. It was jointly serviced by the DTI and SERC, with the DTI in the lead until 31 September 1993, and the SERC thereafter. No report was published by the committee. Its advice was channelled through the internal organisation of the DTI and the SERC.

Subsidence

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the "Coal Mining Subsidence Damage Guide to Claimant's Rights" leaflets will be revised to take account of the restructuring of the coal industry; and when he intends to appoint a subsidence adviser under the powers of the Coal Industry Act 1994.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I announced this morning the appointment of Mr. Malcolm Webb FRICS, ACIArb. to be the subsidence adviser. Arrangements for contacting the subsidence adviser's office are included in the revised "Guide to Claimants' rights" leaflet which has been issued today; copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the total annual cost to United Kingdom industry of the non-alignment of United Kingdom time with standard European time.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My Department has made no such assessment.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff in his Department alter their hours of work or work overtime when the United Kingdom falls out of line with European time.

Mr. Taylor: My Department's rules on working hours are administered locally and provide for alternative working patterns such as flexible working hours. No central records are kept of changes local management might authorise for individuals' working patterns. The cost of collecting such information would be disproportionate.

Post Office

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will conduct a survey into the extra implications for vehicular traffic of closure of post offices.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans to close post offices. Such a survey would, therefore, be unnecessary.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current salary of the secretary of the Post Office board; what was the salary of Miss Morag Macdonald, former secretary of the Post Office board; and in what circumstances, and under what settlement, Miss Morag Macdonald left the Post Office board.

Mr. Eggar: Miss Macdonald has chosen to take a career break from the Post Office for further education purposes. As an employee of the Post Office both her salary and that of the new secretary of the board are the responsibility of the Post Office.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the recent report by the Post Office's corporate planning department on exclusive access by the Royal Mail to Post Office Counters.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the implications of European competition law for continued exclusive access by Royal Mail and Parcelforce to Post Office Counters following privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: We have considered the implications of European competition law for the access arrangements. Such issues have arisen on many occasions in the past and have been satisfactorily resolved. They will be fully dealt with in any proposals for the future of the three Post Office businesses.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding Bridgegate Engineering and the Post Office in the last two months.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 October 1994]: Complaints of a commercial nature by Bridgegate Engineering against the Post Office have been brought to the notice of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, and are receiving serious attention. These are operational matters for the Post Office and I am assured that they have been considered at the very highest levels. It is my understanding that detailed discussions are in progress between lawyers acting for Bridgegate Engineering and the Post Office, who hope that a satisfactory outcome for all concerned will soon be achieved.

Investment Grants

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many companies which received Spanish Government grants as inward investments into Spain in the 1980s have since closed the operation for which those grants were received;

(2) how many companies which received Irish Government grants as inward investments into Eire in the 1980s have since closed the operations for which those grants were received;

(3) how many companies which received French Government grants as inward investments into France in the 1980s have since closed the operations for which those grants were received;

(4) how many companies which received Federal Republic grants as inward investments into West Germany in the 1980s have since closed the operations for which those grants were received;

(5) how many companies which received Italian Government grants as inward investments into Italy in the 1980s have since closed the operations for which those grants were received.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is either unavailable or could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the total costs of preparation for market testing in his Department in terms of (a) payments to consultants and (b) other costs.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To date the total cost of consultancy fees for the market-testing programme has been £2·7 million with other departmental support costs estimated at £3·1 million.

Job Creation Grants

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the grants which have been available from his Department to assist in investment or job creation in each of the past five years, (b) the number of grants given in each category, (c) the value of the grants, (d) the amount of investment created as a result, (e) the number of jobs created on the project assisted, (f) the criteria used in assessing the correctness of making the grants, (h) the procedures used in this monitoring, (i) the number of grants and their value which had been reclaimed for financial and legal impropriety, (j) the number and value reclaimed for failing to achieve the criteria set and (k) the number and value reclaimed for other reasons.

Mr. Eggar: Detailed information is published in the annual reports on the Industrial Development Act 1982, which are available in the Library of the House.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department's expenditure on postage in its headquarters buildings in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	£
1990–91	664,140
1991–92	699,303
1992–93	782,995
1993–94	934,103
1994 to date	921,962

We do not keep information on the number of items posted by the Department.

Public Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his Department organises receptions for those expressing an interest in public appointments for the first time; how often they are held; what is the annual cost; and how many people attend.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 October 1994]: In 1992, as part of the Opportunity 2000 initiative, my noble Friend Baroness Denton, then Parliamentry Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms in the DTI and co-chairman of the Women's National Commission, hosted two receptions at Lancaster House for experienced professional and business women with the aim of introducing potential women candidates for public appointments to Ministers and officials. A total of 119 people attended the receptions and the cost was included in the annual budget for departmental receptions.

Replica Firearms

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total number of replica firearms imported, and from which country, for each year since 1992.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The information requested is not available, as replica firearms are not an identifiable commodity within the standard international trade classification.

Firearms

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total number of firearms imported in the past year; and from which country they came.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The information is not available, for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Bus Industry

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the number of buses (a) exported from and (b) imported into Great Britain and their value in real terms for each year since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The annual United Kingdom trade in buses since 1979 is given in the table. The value in real terms is not available.

Lord Archer of Weston-Super-Mare

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the persons from whom he received advice before deciding to take no further action regarding the report into alleged insider dealing involving Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare.

Mr. Heseltine: It is not my Department's practice to disclose details of individuals from whom legal advice is obtained. Both the advice and its source is regarded as confidential.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the (a) budgeted and (b) total cost of the inquiry into the allegations of insider trading involving Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare.

Mr. Heseltine: The total cost—including inspectors' fees, disbursements and VAT—of the investigation into alleged insider dealing in the shares of Anglia Television Group plc was £213,767. Individual inquiries are not subject to separate budgets.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give figures based on current performance for the number of health service staff she expects will see earnings (a) fall and (b) rise as a result of the introduction of relating pay to performance.

Mr. Moss: The proposals made to staff sides and the professionals who represent the groups covered by national health service review bodies, and included in pay bodies of non-review body groups, would strengthen the links between rewards and performance of the local organisations. Such schemes would be locally determined and depend on the achievement of local objectives for the delivery of high-quality services.

Bill of Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking towards the introduction of a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Government have long recognised that the protection of human rights will be considered in the context of talks necessary to create a comprehensive political settlement. It would be wrong to pre-empt the outcome of those talks.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. and learned Friend approves the following public appointments, which are identified in "Public Bodies 1993":

Executive Bodies—205.
Advisory Bodies—79.
Others—63.
Executive and advisory—1.

The public appointments not included in "Public Bodies 1993" that the Secretary of State is personally responsible for approving are as follows:

Executive Bodies—22.
Advisory Bodies—5.
Others—0.

With regard to the Secretary of State's approv[illegible]or those appointments not listed in "Public Bodies", I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 8 March, Official Report, column 141. In addition to those bodies, the Northern Ireland Regional Medical Physics Agency came into operation on 1 April 1994. The Secretary of State is responsible for the approval of the membership, comprising the chairman and one non-executive director, who are then appointed by the head of the Department of Health and Social Services.

De Lorean

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money was paid in total in grants to the De Lorean motor car company; how much of that money has to date been returned; what has been the cost of the legal proceedings to obtain that return; how many workers in Northern Ireland are currently employed by the company; and what specific changes in policy and procedure have now been implemented by his Department to ensure there is no repetition of the De Lorean affair.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 October 1994]: De Lorean Motor Cars Ltd. received Government assistance amounting to some £77.3 million, including £17.76 million in preference share capital. The company is now in receivership and liquidation and has no employees. The Department of Economic Development has received in excess of £10 million from the receivership and some £5.9 million from other sources. No costs were incurred by the Government on legal proceedings to obtain these sums.

The operating arrangements and investment criteria of the Industrial Development Board were carefully worked out following a comprehensive assessment of the De Lorean case to ensure that such a project would not be supported in future. Those arrangements were reviewed following the 25th report of the Public Accounts Committee and are fully compatible with the recommendations in paragraphs 91 to 98 of that report.

As a separate issue, the Government are pursuing an action for damages against Arthur Anderson and Company in relation to its role as auditors of De Lorean Motor Cars Ltd.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish an up-to-date list of all the (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each tourist board, indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Northern Ireland tourist board has a nine-member board consisting of a chairman and eight members.

EDUCATION

Dearing Report

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she has received Sir Ron Dearing's report on his investigation into awarding procedures in this year's mathematics and science GCSEs; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The investigation by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority is continuing. I have, however, today welcomed interim proposals from Sir Ron Dearing to strengthen and clarify existing arrangements underpinning consistency of grading across GCSE examining groups. These measures include:

Ensuring that the rules for determining grades are clear, consistent and robust.
Improving communications between examining groups.
Producing national sets of candidates' work to help define grade standards in key subjects.
Introducing piloting of any major changes to awarding schemes.

These will start to come into effect for the winter 1994 GCSE examinations and will all be in place for examinations from summer 1995 onwards.

I have also agreed that the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority should review with the examining groups the scope for a more co-ordinated approach to syllabuses, examinations and awarding in the core subjects from 1998 in the interests of securing consistency of grading.

I am placing in the Library of the House my exchange of correspondence with Sir Ron Dearing.

Schools (Emergency Cover)

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent discussions she has had with teachers' representatives to enlist their support for the provision of adequate emergency cover in schools for children suffering acute allergic reactions and other life-threatening conditions.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not discussed this issue specifically with the teacher unions recently, but I met my right hon. Friend and members of the Anaphylaxis Campaign, whose representatives included a head teacher, on 27 September. "Consideration" is being given to further appropriate measures to deal with those concerns.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much her Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by her Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: The following figures include the central spend on postage by my Department and our contracted mailing house:

Financial Year	Cost £
1989–90	870,558
1990–91	575,951
1991–92	674,372
1992–93	796,161
1993–94	490,906

Information is not collected about the occasional dispatches carried out on the Department's behalf by ad hoc mailing contractors. The figures for 1993–94 reflect the fact that the Office for Standards in Education has assumed financial responsibility for its own post bill. Information about the number of items posted is not held centrally.

Special Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what medical training her Department advises is necessary for escorts of children with special educational needs being transported to and from school.

Mr. Forth: It is for local education authorities to satisfy themselves that appropriate supervision is provided for the transport of children with special educational needs. The Government endorsed a Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents report in 1991 which recommended that escorts should have a knowledge and understanding of the particular disabilities of the children they escort and that they should have received adequate first aid training.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice her Department has given to local education authorities on the transport of children with special educational needs to and from school.

Mr. Forth: Transport arrangements made by local education authorities must enable pupils to travel in reasonable safety and comfort, without undue stress, strain or difficulty such as would prevent the child benefiting from the education provided at the school. Guidance on the management and safety of school transport was included in a circular letter on a range of school transport issues sent to all chief education officers in England in January 1994.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many public appointments (a) she is responsible for making and (b) require her approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if she will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is given below.

	Number of appointments the Secretary of State is responsible for making	Number of appointments that require approval from the Secretary of State
Executive bodies	255	1
Advisory bodies	19	—
Other bodies	87[1]	1

[1] These figures include eight appointments to the SLC made jointly by the Secretaries of State for Education and for Scotland. Further appointments can be made at the discretion of the Secretaries of State.

The Secretary of State is also empowered to establish education associations and may appoint as many members as she considers appropriate to each association.

"Our Children's Education"

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pensioner households received the publication Our "Children's Education".

Mr. Robin Squire: "Our Children's Education", the updated parents charter, was delivered to every household in England. This means that all pensioner households should have received a copy. I would expect many of them to be interested in the contents, but as taxpayers, grandparents or both.

Stratford School

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the qualifications of Mrs. Gould of Combe Hay Partnership to become a governor of Stratford school; and what fees she will receive.

Mr. Robin Squire: Mrs. Daphne Gould OBE is the former head teacher of an east London school, with particular experience of Stratford school through her previous services as the Secretary of State's additional governor. Mrs. Gould was a founder member of the National Curriculum Council, and is one of only six honorary fellows of the university of London's institute of education. Mrs. Gould will not, of course, receive fees for her duties as a governor. However, the Secretary of State has separately asked her to carry out consultancy work at the school for a period not exceeding 10 days this term, for which she will be remunerated at an appropriate rate.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout her Department.

Mr. Forth: No record is kept of such estimates.

Higher and Further Education Fees

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines she has published on the charging of registration fees to home students by higher and further education colleges.

Mr. Boswell: There are no Government guidelines on the charging of registration fees to students.

Budget Allocations

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of her Department's budget in the last year for which figures are available was spent on (a) nursery, (b) primary, (c) secondary and (d) higher and further education; and what were the corresponding figures five, 10 and 15 years ago.

Mr. Robin Squire: During this period the Department's responsibilities have changed. It has previously had responsibility for science, arts, libraries and sport. Responsibility for funding some sectors of education has passed from local education authorities to the Department. The table accordingly provides figures for expenditure on the activities in question, as a proportion of expenditure on education by the Department and by English local authorities. The percentage of expenditure on each sector reflects in part demographic trends, and also the recent rapid growth in participation in higher education. The figures are for England only, with the exception of those figures for further and higher education which include spending on mandatory student awards in Wales. Other figures for Wales, and those for Scotland and Northern Ireland, are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Proportion of expenditure on sectors of education as percentage of total local and central Government education expenditure

	1994-95[1]	1989-90	1984-85	1979-80
Nursery[2]	—	4.2	2.6	2.1
Primary	22.1	19.5	19.2	20.3
Secondary[3]	23.3	27	29.9	28.2
Special schools[4]	5	3.5	3.3	3
Schools capital[5]	2.2	4.1	2.5	4.3
Higher and further education[6]	35.9	28.5	30.1	28.7
Other[7]	11.5	13.2	12.4	13.4

[1] Central Government element of figures based on planned expenditure. Local Authority recurrent expenditure is taken from local authority Revenue Account budget returns. Schools capital expenditure figures do not allow for Local Authorities' self-financed expenditure. The figures in this column are therefore not directly comparable with those in other columns, which report outturn expenditure.

[2] For 1989-90 only figures include rising fives in primary schools. Figures for 1994-95 have been included in figures for primary schools, as the figures available do not fully disaggregate funding on nursery provision from primary provision.

[3] Figures include expenditure on assisted places, recurrent expenditure on CTCs and music and ballet schools.

[4] Figures have been shown separately for special schools which often have pupils of both primary and secondary age.

[5] Figures showing the split of capital expenditure between primary and secondary schools are not available.

[6] Figures include expenditure on institutional recurrent and capital funding, mandatory student awards (maintenance grants and tuition fees), discretionary awards, postgraduate awards, student loans, access funds and adult education. Mandatory awards programme also covers Wales. In 1979-80, 1984-85 and 1989-90 the Department was responsible through the University Grants Committee and the Universities Funding Council for recurrent funding to universities in Scotland and Wales. The figures have been adjusted to remove this element of expenditure.

[7] Includes expenditure on administration, research programme, youth service, school meals, transport, teachers' centres, child guidance and pupil support.

TRANSPORT

A38

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends announcing his Department's preferred routes for the A38 trunk road improvement schemes Saltash-Trerulefoot and Liskeard-Bodmin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Robert Hicks dated 27 October 1994:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Transport to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the proposed improvement of the A38 trunk road between Saltash and Trerulefoot and between Liskeard and Bodmin. The timing of the preferred route announcements depends upon the progress of the schemes themselves, which is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

We expect Ministers to be able to announce the preferred routes for both of these schemes in November.

The announcement on the Liskeard to Bodmin scheme has had to await detailed consideration of the A38 Action Group's suggestion that the trunk road should be improved along its existing line through the environmentally sensitive Glynn Valley.

The Saltash to Trerulefoot scheme is also sensitive. Villagers of Landrake have come out in favour of resurrecting the old route, which passes through a Site of Special Scientific Interest and a proposed Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty. We have wished to find ways of responding to the concerns that have led them to prefer the old route.

Other aspects of this scheme have also given concern to residents, developers and planners, not least its potential effects on the Broadmoor Farm area which the owners and the District Council wish to develop as a business or industrial park. We have wished to ensure that all the concerns that have been expressed as a result of the Public Consultation have been properly understood and taken into account.

Rail Safety

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a survey of the safety of single line railway tracks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: No.

Non-motorised Transport

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what practical steps he is taking to improve the collection and presentation of data in respect of non-motorised transport modes.

Mr. Norris: The national travel survey is the main source of national data on walking and is a major source of national data on cycling. The survey was conducted five times at irregular intervals between 1965 and 1986, but since 1988 the survey has been expanded to collect data on a continuous basis.

The Department undertakes regular reviews of the need for all types of data but has no plans for further innovations for these modes at present.

Railway Stations

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions are in place or are proposed to require porters at railway stations to assist (a) passengers who have disabilities and (b) those passengers who have children in their charge while at the same time carrying luggage.

Mr. Watts: The provision of porters at stations is a matter for British Rail. I understand that British Rail tries to ensure that stations are staffed according to the expected demand.

The Rail Regulator has a statutory duty to have regard to the interests of persons who are disabled. He requires all station operators to produce and comply with a disabled people's protection policy as a condition of being granted a licence to operate.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to prohibit the charge made at mainline stations for the use of toilet facilities by passengers or to include the cost of toilet facilities in the cost of a train ticket; and what assessment he has made of the arrangements made for charging for toilet facilities by food outlets at stations.

Mr. Watts: These are matters for station operators.

Train Failure

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will inquire into the cause of a double engine failure during a rail journey between Birmingham and London on 26 April and into whether this train was in a safe condition to carry passengers.

Mr. Watts: Engine failure is an operational matter for the relevant train operating company, which has a statutory responsibility to operate its services safely. The train operating company would be required to report it only if there were personal injury or if other, specific circumstances were involved. Engine failure is not a reportable occurrence.

River Thames

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to increase the use of the Thames for commercial, industrial and leisure transport.

Mr. Norris: The River Thames working group has been examining the present transport uses of the Thames, the factors which inhibit the growth of traffic on it, and the potential for developing both freight and passenger traffic. The group will report as soon as possible.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department in each of the past five years.

Mr. Norris: My Department has spent the following sums on postage:

1991–92

£13·13 million.

1992–93

£12·93 million.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity for Work Appeals

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of appeals concerning incapacity for work during (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 by claimants of (i) incapacity benefit, ii) severe disablement allowance and (iii) income support.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the format requested. Current planning assumptions are that the number of appeals which will be lodged on the question of incapacity will be in the region of 140,000 in 1995–96 and 190,000 in 1996–97.

21-hour Rule

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for changing the 21-hour rule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Evans: The "21-hour rule" is a special provision which enables income support claimants who are unemployed to spend their time usefully in part-time study while continuing their search for work. The rules governing study on benefit are designed to allow people to undertake study, which will increase their employability, while remaining available for, and actively seeking, work. The "Jobseeker's Allowance" White Paper, which was published on 24 October, makes it clear that the Government intend to continue broadly with the same approach in JSA. Details of the JSA scheme are still under consideration.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Hague: No records are kept of such activities.

Inflation

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect on pensioner spending power on the occasion when Great Britain last had inflation over 10 per cent.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government fully recognise the importance of maintaining low inflation in protecting pensioners' spending power.

Since October 1990, when inflation was last above 10 per cent., it is estimated[1] that pensioners'[2] average weekly incomes have risen by more than 12 per cent. in real terms.

Notes:

2. Measurement based on pensioner units which include single pensioners and couples where the husband is over state pension age.

Market Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his current calculation of the costs of preparation for market testing in his Department in terms of (a) payments to consultants and (b) other costs.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Consultancy costs to date in preparation for market testing are £4,614,579 and other costs are £5,819,468.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hague: The departmental expenditure on postage in each of the last five years was:

1989–90	38,515,000
1990–91	46,969,000
1991–92	59,718,000
1992–93	70,198,000
1993–94	71,320,000

The number of items posted is not available for the whole period in question. However, for the financial year 1993–94, the number of items posted via the Royal Mail was 311,043,023.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social security how many PD12D chronic bronchitis and emphysema appeals had been heard to 11 September by (a) a special medical board and (b) a medical appeals tribunal; and how many were successful at each stage.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Housing Benefit Management Information System*Notes*

(1) The above figures are benefit units. A benefit unit may be a single person or a couple.

(2) The average caseload is based on 100 per cent. enquiries taken at the end of February, May, August and November of each year.

(3) When the Local Authorities have failed to send in a return, figures have been estimated.

(4) Prior to April 1989 the average caseload includes rate rebate cases.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the total cost and number of recipients of housing benefit in the current year; and what were the equivalent figures for 1982.

Mr. Roger Evans: pursuant to his reply, 24 October, Official Report, column 425]: The figures for rent allowance and rent rebate caseload had been transposed.

The correct information is set out in the table.

Great Britain		Housing Benefit only		Housing Benefit plus an estimate for the number of people on Supplementary Benefit who get help with housing costs
		Spending £ (millions)	Caseload (thousands)	Spending £ (millions)	Caseload (thousands)
1982–83[1]	Rent rebate	929	3,050	1,777	3,580
	Rent allowance	74	260	351	851
1994–95[2]	Rent rebate	5,659	3,186	—	—
	Rent allowance	4,320	1,432	—	—

Note

1982–83 caseload and expenditure figures include estimates for people whose Supplementary Benefit payments included help with their housing costs.

[1] Information taken from Public Expenditure papers.

[2] "Government's Expenditure Plans 1994–95 to 1996–97". Caseload information extrapolated from figures in same report.

Personal Injury Claims

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total value of all benefits recovered from claimants awarded damages for personal injury claims in each year since 1979 expressed in constant 1994 prices.

Mr. Roger Evans: The compensation recovery scheme came into force on 3 September 1990. No records are held of the amounts of benefit recovered by compensators before that date because the Department was not involved in the process. The amounts recovered since 3 September 1990 in 1994–95 prices are as follows:

1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
4·35	27·96	54·55	84·36	47·50

Notes

1. All figures are in £ millions.
2. Figures exclude recoveries from awards that do not exceed £2,500. Compensators may exercise the right to offset such awards by half the value of benefits payable, but the Department is not involved in the process. Accordingly, no records are held of these recoveries.
3. Figures for 1994–95 are to 30 September 1994 only.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security who were the members of the group of experts who were asked to advise on the procedures for assessing the effects of mental health problems in relation to incapacity benefit.

Mr. Hague: Panel members who agreed to have their names published are listed in the report "The Medical Assessment for Incapacity Benefit", copies of which are in the Library. Ten members of the panel, including some members of the sub-group which advised on the mental health assessment, did not want their names published. We do not have the consent of any panel member to disclose his involvement in a particular part of the work, such as the mental health assessment. The sub-group which advised on the mental health assessment included panel members with experience in psychological medicine, occupational health and general practice.

WALES

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to launch a rough sleepers initiative in Wales to alleviate the problems caused by homeless people sleeping overnight in open-air locations in the Principality.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office continues to devote considerable resources to the prevention and alleviation of homelessness. In 1994–95 some £5,000,000 was available to local authorities for capital schemes addressing homelessness or under-occupation; £500,000 revenue funding is also being directed to voluntary bodies.

To tackle a specific identified problem of single vulnerable young homeless people, £800,000 is being provided for a three-year pilot project in Cardiff.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the temporary traffic regulation orders for which he has authorised an extension under section 15(5) of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1994 as amended by the Road Traffic (Temporary Restrictions) Act 1991, stating in each case (a) the name of the authority making the order, (b) the public rights of way stopped up by the order, (c) the duration of the extension and (d) why he granted the extension.

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list the companies which received selective financial assistance in 1992, 1993 and 1994 to the latest date; and what were the total sums paid in selective assistance for each year.

Mr. Redwood: Details of companies receiving regional selective assistance offers of £75,000 or more are published quarterly in the Employment Gazette, while summarised information relating to regional assistance is published each year in the Industrial Development Act 1982 annual reports. Copies of both publications are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of people employed in his Department; and under what subject headings they work.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total and proportion of his staff of his Department employed on agricultural duties in each of the past 14 years for which figures are available.

Acid Rain

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to reduce the effects of acid rain on Welsh rivers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In June the Government signed a significant new international agreement within United Nations Economic Commission for Europe aimed at achieving substantial reductions in emissions of sulphur dioxide, one of the main contributors to acid rain. This represents the latest step in the Government's wide-ranging programme of measures to reduce the effects of acid rain in Wales and elsewhere in the United Kingdom, including tighter controls on emissions from industry and vehicles. As part of this, the Welsh Office is sponsoring studies with the National Rivers Authority on the effectiveness of liming of river catchments in Wales.

Quangos

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to improve the accountability of Welsh quangos.

Mr. Redwood: My ministerial colleagues and I hold regular review meetings with each Welsh executive non-departmental public body to consider targets and performance; and NDPBs are to be provided with clear statements of their responsibilities and the roles of the board and its staff and of the Department. I also expect each NDPB to adopt, with such adaptations as are appropriate to its circumstances, the recently published "Code of Best Practice for Board Members of Public Bodies", which requires public bodies and their boards:

> To observe the highest standards of impartiality, integrity and objectivity in relation to their stewardship of public funds.
> To comply with Government policy on openness and to respond to all reasonable requests for information.
> To be accountable to Parliament, users of services, individual citizens and staff for the activities of the bodies concerned, their stewardship of public funds and the extent to which key performance targets have been met.
> To maximise value for money by ensuring that services are delivered in the most efficient and economical way.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of appointments made to quango boards by himself and each of his predecessors since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not available in the form requested. However, I have appointed 46 people to executive non-departmental public bodies since 1 September 1993.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the quangos set up by himself and each of each predecessors since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: The following executive non-departmental public bodies have been set up since 1979:

	Year
Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting	1983
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation	1987
Housing for Wales	1989
Countryside Council for Wales[1]	1991
Higher Education Funding Council for Wales	1992
Further Education Funding Council for Wales	1992

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new regional aid proposals he has to safeguard the jobs at the Central Statistical Office in Newport.

Mr. Redwood: Policy in relation to the Central Statistical Office is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Redwood: Expenditure from my Department's postage budget in each of the last five years was;

Financial year	£
1989–90	394,750
1990–91	440,779
1991–92	556,659
1992–93	541,539
1993–94	486,614

Figures for the number of items are not available.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what medical training his Department advises is necessary for escorts of children with special educational needs being transported to and from school.

Mr, Richards: It is for local education authorities to satisfy themselves that appropriate supervision is made for the conveyance of children with special educational needs. The Government endorsed a Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents report in 1991 which recommended that escorts should receive adequate first aid training.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice his Department has given to local education authorities on the transport of children with special educational needs to and from school.

Mr. Richards: Local education authorities are obliged to transport pupils in reasonable safety and comfort. Transport should be non-stressful, such as to enable a child to travel to and from school without undue stress, strain or difficulty such as would prevent the child benefiting from the education provided at the school. The advice was included in a draft circular issued for consultation earlier in the year, the final version of which should issue shortly.

Redundant Churches and Chapels

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in establishing redundant churches and chapels funds for Wales; and what comparisons he has drawn with arrangements elsewhere.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for issues relating to redundant churches and chapels has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E.A.J. Carr to Mrs. Ann Clwyd, dated 26 October 1994:

> The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about progress towards establishing redundant churches and redundant chapels funds in Wales.
> In its response to the Welsh Affairs Committee report, "The Preservation of Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments", the Government indicated that it was prepared to fund 70 per cent. of the costs of mechanisms to care for the best redundant religious buildings for which no other arrangement could be made.
> Cadw is making good progress with the Representative Body of the Church in Wales and the Friends of Friendless Churches in identifying arrangements to care for redundant churches of the Church in Wales. The Friends has a proven track record in caring sympathetically for redundant churches in Wales and already has four in its hands. Most recently, a wider package of financial support has been offered to the Friends, whose founder died last year meaning the organisation has had to regroup, opening the way for its care to be further extended. Our detailed discussions are continuing on how it is to be done.
> The position with redundant chapels is rather different. There is no obvious mechanism which might be grant-aided to care for these and our aim is to stimulate the establishment of a body, in the voluntary sector, on the lines of the Historic Chapels Trust in England. To encourage a wider interest in the issue, Cadw has asked the Wales Council for Voluntary Action to organise a conference which will be held at the Norwegian Church, Cardiff on 29 November. The aim is to discuss the problems that such a mechanism might address and to promote the involvement of interested people.

"Our Children's Education"

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pensioner households received the publication "Our Children's Education".

Mr. Richards: This publication was distributed in England only and is therefore a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Playing Fields

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the capital receipts from the sale of school playing fields for each of the last six years by education authority.

Mr. Richards [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The information requested is not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Associations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for the latest year for which figures are available total annual rent roll and the total annual staff salaries bill for the top 100 housing associations.

Mr. Curry: The latest available information is for the financial year 1992–93 and is set out below.

The annual rent roll has been provided for the top 100 associations and includes rents collected from both self-contained accommodation and from shared housing developments such as hostels.

Information on staff salaries is available only for the top 50 associations, based on a special exercise mounted by the Housing Corporation earlier this year.

Rivers

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to the Office of Water Services and the water companies to ensure that river sites of special scientific interest are protected from deterioration due to sewage effluent during the period 1995–2000.

Mr. Atkins: In an answer to my hon. Friend on 6 July, Official Report, columns 241–42, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced £522·3 million of spending in the period 1995 to 2000, specifically to improve river quality where such improvements would not otherwise be required. This was taken into account by the Director General of Water Services when he determined the water companies' new price limits, announced on 28 July. The National Rivers Authority will decide in consultation with the water companies how this spending should be prioritised.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for 1992–93 and 1993–94, the amount spent in each London borough, with totals for each training and enterprise council area, under each of the programmes now incorporated into the single regeneration budget, regardless of whether the sums were paid to the borough council, and the amount allocated to be spent in 1994–95 on the same basis.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The figures cover the support given to projects under the programmes, or parts of programmes, which now form the single regeneration budget. The total expenditure on several of the programmes will be higher, reflecting contributions from local authorities, the private sector and so on.

Rights of Way

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the number of public rights of way that have been blocked or otherwise obstructed by landowners since 1984.

Mr. Atkins: The Countryside Commission carried out a major sample survey of the condition of the network in 1988 and estimated that more than 39,000 km of rights of way were blocked and unusable, about half of which were thought to be the responsibility of landowners. The commission, which gave up responsibility for Wales in 1991, has a further sample survey in hand.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that fresh planning applications by the new mining companies for opencast coal mines on sites which the local planning authority has previously rejected will not be entertained and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: No. Each case must be considered on its merits. Where a development plan is material to the proposal, application must be determined in accordance with the plan, unless material considerations indicate otherwise. However, section 70A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, as inserted by section 17 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, provides that a local planning authority may decline to determine an application if within the period of two years ending with the date on which the application is received the Secretary of State has refused a similar application referred to him under section 77 of the 1990 Act or has dismissed an appeal against the refusal of a similar application; and there has been no significant change since the decision in the development plan, so far as it is relevant, or in any other material considerations.

Wildlife and Countryside Act

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of appeals under paragraph 4 of schedule 14 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 determined in 1992 and 1993 for which the time taken from receipt of appeal by his Department to its determination was (a) not more than six months, (b) more than six months but not more than 12 months, (c) more than 12 months but not more than 18 months, (d) more than 18 months but not more than 24 months or (e) more than 24 months.

Mr. Atkins: Statistics on appeals under paragraph 4 of schedule 14 are not collected in the form requested. However, the table shows on a regional basis the average time taken for the cases determined in each year.

Appeals under paragraph 4, schedule 14 Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

	1992		1993
Regional offices	Number of cases	Average time (months)	Number of cases	Average time (months)
Northern	—	—	—	—
North Western	3	16	11	20
Yorkshire and Humberside	—	—	5	13
West Midlands	—	—	—	—
East Midlands	6	8	1	9
Eastern	11	12	9	6
South Eastern	14	26	19	11
South Western	7	21	24	15
London	1	13	1	22

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long he allows surveying authorities to comment on appeals under paragraph 4 of schedule 14 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Atkins: Surveying authorities are given eight weeks to comment on the appellant's grounds of appeal and to submit a statement of case. If no response is received, a reminder is sent and a further two weeks allowed before the appeal can proceed: extensions of time are granted where appropriate. The authority is then given three weeks to comment on each occasion the appellant or third party makes further representations.

Renewal Programmes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on his policy towards urban renewal programmes based upon area schemes;

(2) how many renewal areas have been designated each year under the provisions of Local Government and Housing Act 1989

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We encourage local authorities to declare renewal areas where the appropriate circumstances exist. The number that have been notified to the Department each year since introduction of the 1989 Act is:

	Number
1990	9
1991	27
1992	18
1993	21
1994	[1]5
Total	80

[1] To date.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to announce the result of his consultation on private housing renewal programmes;

(2) What study he has made of the adverse effect on area renewal programmes in urban areas by a shift towards pepper potting of individual properties.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We are considering the responses to the consultation paper, many of which addressed the effect of the demand-led arrangements that we have at the moment on the ability of local authorities to develop renewal strategies for their areas. An announcement on the outcome of this review will be made in due course.

Correspondence

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will respond to the letter of 26 September from the hon. Member for Leicester, East.

Sir Paul Beresford: I replied to the hon. Member's letter yesterday.

Rented Accommodation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of private rented accommodation has (a) two rooms or fewer or (b) three rooms or more; and what plans he has to produce guidelines concerning suitable accommodation for households in the private rented sector.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Some 15 per cent. of households renting privately in England have two rooms or fewer, and 85 per cent. have three rooms or more. These proportions are from the 1993–94 survey of English housing and are subject to sampling error.

The Department has issued guidance to local authorities in support of their powers to enforce adequate standards of safety and amenity in houses in multiple occupation. Certain general standards relating to fitness and overcrowding are set out in primary legislation. But otherwise it is for landlords and tenants to agree the suitability of accommodation. We have no plans to issue further guidelines.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payments have been made by his Department during the last five years to individuals or companies in Yorkshire and Humberside in support of projects which it was assumed would create employment; and how many jobs have been created in each case.

Sir Paul Beresford [pursuant to his reply, Wednesday 26 October 1994, column 76]: Until last November my Department awarded city grant to private developers in support of projects designed to create employment. On 10 November 1993, responsibility for city grant was assumed by English Partnerships.

In the five years to April 1994, £43·75 million of city grant was awarded in Yorkshire and Humberside in support of 41 schemes, which were expected to create 6,318 new jobs.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Sir Paul Beresford: Adjusting clocks forms part of the normal day-to-day maintenance of my Department's buildings. No separate records are kept of the time spent on this.

Butterfly Conservation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to improve butterfly conservation.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Conservation (Natural Habitats Etc.) Regulations 1994, implementing the EC habitats directive, take effect on 30 October. Of native species, the marsh fritillary—euphydryas aurinia—is included on annexe II of the directive, which lists those species whose conservation requires the designation of special areas of conservation; the large blue butterfly—maculinea arion—is included in annexe IV, for species requiring strict protection.

English Nature's species recovery programme is enjoying some success with the large blue butterfly. Adult butterflies have emerged on five sites and a sixth site is being prepared for next year.

The development of targets for species conservation for publication in 1995 was announced in "Biodiversity : The United Kingdom Action Plan". We expect these to include butterflies.

A34

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received from the European Commission regarding the application of directive 85/337 to the proposed A34 Newbury bypass.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State for the Environment has received no advice from the European Commission regarding the application of directive 85/37 to the proposed A34 Newbury bypass. The European Commission did, however, send informal letters of inquiry about this project, to which we replied, in 1991 and 1993. No further communication has been received.

Dormice

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to whether the provisions of the Conservation (Natural Habitats Etc) Regulations are adequate to comply fully with the United Kingdom Government's obligation to protect the habitats of dormice, under the European habitats directive.

Sir Paul Beresford: The regulations were drafted to afford the requisite level of protection for all animal species listed on annexe IVa of the EC habitats directive, including the dormouse—muscardinus avellanarius. Regulation 39(1)(d) makes it an offence to damage or destroy a breeding site or resting place of such an animal, reflecting article 12(1)(d) of the directive. Derogations under licence from these provisions for specified purposes are allowed where the authorities are satisfied that there is no satisfactory alternative and that the action authorised will not be detrimental to the maintenance of the population of the species concerned at a favourable conservation status in their natural range.

Air Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to improve knowledge on the effects on the air quality of pollution by (a) PMIOs (b) Aramatis, (c) oletins, (d) formaldehydes and (e) oxides of nitrogen and photochemical smog.

Mr. Atkins: As announced on 3 October, £5 million is to be made available to the Institute of Environment and Health to investigate links between air pollution and respiratory disease. This is in addition to annual expenditure of over £9 million by my Department on air quality research and monitoring.

The expert panel on air quality standards has published recommendations on benzene and ozone, and will be publishing recommendations on carbon monoxide and 1,3-butadiene in the near future. It is at present considering particulates and NO_2 and expects to make recommendations in due course. The quality of urban air review group and the photochemical oxidants review group continue to provide advice on wider air quality issues.

I hope to make an announcement later this year on the Government's response to the consultation paper "Improving Air Quality".

Bats and Rodents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to improve the conservation of native British bats and rodents.

Sir Paul Beresford: In addition to the protection afforded by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to all native bat species and two species of rodent, the Conservation (Natural Habitats Etc) Regulations 1994, which take effect on 30 October, will further strengthen the conservation of many bat species and one species of rodent.

English Nature's species recovery programme, which has already enjoyed some success with the common dormouse and the red squirrel, includes a new three-year project to assist the greater horseshoe bat.

Canals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to increase the use of canals for commercial, industrial and leisure transport.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce new proposals regarding increasing the use of canals. However the new chairman of British Waterways, Bernard Henderson CBE, has been asked to consider ways in which the use of canals for which he is responsible may be increased in the national interest, especially for leisure and tourism.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Sir Paul Bereford: My Department has spent the following sums on postage:

1989–90 — £ 0·440 million
1990–91 — £ 0·687 million
1991–92 — £ 0·755 million
1992–93 — £ 0·883 million
1993–94 — £ 1·121 million
1994–95 — £ 0·529 million (Year to September)

Figures on the number of items posted are kept only for mail from the Department's main London headquarters buildings. Figures are available only from 1991–92 and are as follows:

1991–92 — 937,096 items
1992–93 — 947,536 items
1993–94 — 962,940 items
1994–95 — 457,267 items (Year to September)

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State is responsible for the following public appointments[1]:

	Numbers
to executive bodies	438
to advisory bodies	166
to other bodies	418

[1] includes appointments made by Her Majesty The Queen on the advice of the Secretary of State.

There are no appointments which require his approval but for which he is not responsible.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the triennial review of Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Atkins: Ordnance Survey was established as an executive agency on 1 May 1990. In 1993, an evaluation report concluded that agency status had been a spur to significant improvements in performance. In particular, the acceleration of the conversion of the basic scales mapping archive to a computerised database, the good trading results in a difficult trading period and the attainment of challenging quality–of–service and output targets were important achievements in a highly creditable performance. These improvements and other innovations were recognised in 1993 by a chartermark award.

In order to supplement a review undertaken by officials, consultants were appointed to look at options for the future status of Ordnance Survey. They assessed that Ordnance Survey would continue to progress well in its current status as an executive agency. They also believed that privatisation of Ordnance Survey offers potential benefits. The consultants found that various obstacles preclude this change of status in the immediate future and were also unable, at present, to quantify the full costs and benefits of privatisation.

The consultants further concluded that contractorisation was the worst of the options examined. The Government accept these conclusions and recognise that a final decision to privatise is not yet possible. Ordnance Survey will therefore continue as an executive agency for a further four years. A new framework document will be drawn up to cover the period. During this time the obstacles to privatisation will be investigated thoroughly with a view to clarifying and overcoming them so that the costs and benefits can be established. A further announcement and, if necessary, public consultation, will take place following this major review. The consultants also recommended that a move to trading fund status would be beneficial for Ordnance Survey, whether or not privatisation was pursued eventually. This recommendation is accepted and we will be seeking to move Ordnance Survey to a trading fund basis from April 1996. Over the next four years, Ordnance Survey will continue to develop its revenue-generating activities. Ordnance Survey will also continue to improve its efficiency in order to reduce further its costs to the taxpayer through contracting out wherever there is economic benefit, through collaborations with the private sector wherever appropriate and through innovative management. In addition, Ordnance Survey will seek to achieve all this without any diminution of the quality of its products and services which underpin many key activities of Government and commerce in Britain.

A summary of the consultants' report has been placed in the Library.

Petrol

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he plans to give to the public on the use of leaded and unleaded petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Government advice to motorist remains firm:

> Those whose cars can run on unleaded petrol and who are not using it should start doing so.
> Those already using unleaded petrol should not switch back to using leaded petrol.

The Government do not accept criticism of Government policy on unleaded petrol contained in the Transport Select Committee report on transport-related air pollution in London.

These is no credible evidence of any significant differences in emissions of benzene between non-catalyst cars running on leaded and premium unleaded petrol.

There is no evidence that use of super-unleaded petrol contributes significantly to total ambient concentrations of benzene. Super-unleaded petrol comprises only 5 per cent. to 6 per cent. of the market, and that share is declining. We are, however, keeping its use under review.

Benzene levels in the United Kingdom are below the five part per billion level recommended to Government by the expert panel for air quality standards, and are likely to fall as more catalyst-equipped cars enter the national fleet.

Health advice is that there are much stronger grounds for concern regarding small increases in blood-lead concentrations than regarding small changes in ambient concentrations of benzene. It is hoped that publicity given to the Transport Committee report will not lead to increased emissions of lead from road transport.

HEALTH

Health Statistics

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will update the information published in appendix G on pages 31–32 of the minutes of evidence taken before the Health Select Committee on "The Responsibilities of the Director of Statistics and the Director of Research and Development", HC 1992–93, 624, by giving the corresponding tabulations from the hospital episode system for 1991–92 and 1992–93.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested from 1991–92 will be placed in the Library. The analysis for 1992–93 is not yet available.

Water

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment she has made on the effect on public health of restricted use of water for general household purposes;

(2) what discussions she has had with the Medical Officer of Health about the benefits or disbenefits to public health of restricting the use of water for general household purposes.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Renal Replacement Therapy

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the rate of acceptance of new patients for renal replacement therapy by district health authorities and regional health authorities in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: The available information will be placed in the Library.

Breast Screening

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women between the ages of 50 years and 64 years have been invited for breast screening in each year since 1990, by (a) district health authority, (b) family health services authority and (c) region; and how many women were actually screened in each case.

Mr. Sackville: Information on breast cancer screening has been collected centrally since financial year 1988–89, but 1991–92 was the first year for which the data were of sufficient quality to allow any analysis. Regionally based information on estimated percentage uptake of screening invitations for 1991–92 and 1992–93 is shown in the table. Information is not available centrally at district or family health services authority level.

Region	1991–92 per cent.	1992—93 per cent.
England (Total)	72	72
Northern	75	75
Yorkshire	74	72
Trent	78	78
East Anglia	81	79
North West Thames	58	61
North East Thames	61	61
South East Thames	71	70
South West Thames	66	68
Wessex	79	76
Oxford	77	76
South Western	75	77
West Midlands	72	70
Mersey	69	72
North Western	73	76

Information on the number of women screened by regional health authority is published in breast cancer screening summary information from Form KC62 England. The 1992–3 data are to be distributed shortly and an advance copy will be placed in the Library.

Learning Disability Hospitals

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with learning disabilities are resident in long-stay hospitals; and if she will list the long-stay learning disability hospitals still operating.

Mr. Bowis: Information on residents by type of hospital is not available centrally. The figure for people with a length of stay of one or more years in national health service hospitals under the mental handicap, learning disability specialty, in England, as at 31 March 1993 is 13,500.

A list will be placed in the Library of NHS trusts and directly managed units that have beds designated as being for long-term learning disability patients.

Calman Report

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the proposals in the Calman report.

Mr. Malone: Substantial progress has been made and a programme to implement the report's recommendations is outlined in EL(94)71, "Implementation of the Report of the Working Group on Specialist Medical Training—Hospital Doctors: Training for the Future". Copies of the national health service executive letter, which was issued on 22 September 1994, are available in the Library.

Mental Health Budget

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current mental health budget (a) per head of population and (b) in total (i) in each region and (ii) for the London implementation zone.

Mr. Bowis: Decisions about spending on hospital and community health services for mentally ill people are taken locally by district health authorities and general practitioner fundholders based on their assessment of the needs of mentally ill people living in the district or on the practice's list. Information on this expenditure is not available centrally. It is not possible to identify separately the element of family health services expenditure which relates to mentally ill people.

General Practitioner Fundholders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conditions are attached to general practitioner fundholder savings used to improve or build surgeries owned by the general practitioners.

Mr. Malone: Fundholding general practitioners' savings are to be used for the benefit of patients of the practice. In approving proposals for the use of savings, family health services authorities are expected to consider carefully any plans to extend surgery premises for the benefit of patients.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether general practitioner fundholders can use their savings to employ a general practitioner assistant.

Mr. Malone: A medical practitioner may be employed from fundholder savings only to provide approved fundholding procedures and may not be employed to provide general medical services.

Asthma

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children (a) had asthma and (b) were admitted to hospital with asthma in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Sackville: It is estimated that between 4 and 6 per cent. of children suffer from asthma sufficiently seriously to require medical supervision. Numbers of hospital in-patient cases of children suffering from asthma are available from hospital episode statistics for the years shown in the table. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Refugee Children

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those local authorities that provide care and support for 50 or more unaccompanied refugee children under the provisions of the Children Act 1989; and what financial assistance has been given by central Government to those local authorities since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: Information about whether children looked after by local authorities have refugee status is not available centrally. Financial assistance totalling £4,197,698 has been given through a Department of the Environment special grant to local authorities caring for unaccompanied refugee children in respect of 1993–94.

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many unaccompanied refugee children were being supported by the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea (a) on 1 April 1991 and (b) at the latest available date; and by how much the children's services block in the standard spending assessment has increased in the same period.

Mr. Bowis: Information about whether children looked after by local authorities have refugee status is not available centrally.

In 1990–91, the children's services sub-block of the personal social services standard spending assessment for Kensington and Chelsea was £11·945 million. In 1994–95, following a comprehensive review of the standard spending assessment formulae, and the first full use of data from the 1991 census, the equivalent figure is £11·926 million.

Private Patients

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total income generated from private patients in 1993–94, and for each trust.

Mr. Sackville: This information will not be available until December 1994.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospital trusts have dedicated private bed units.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 26 May, Official Report, column 303.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the NHS activity figure for private patients by region in 1992–93 and 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1992–93 will be published shortly in "Hospital Episodes Statistics, Volume 1, England 1992–93", copies of which will be placed in the Library. The 1993-94 figures are not yet available.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what limits there are on the number of private beds as percent private work that NHS trusts can do.

Mr. Sackville: None, providing there is no significant interference with the performance of the trust of its obligations under national health service contracts. That statutory requirement prevents NHS patients from being disadvantaged by private practice within the health service.

Alcohol (Women)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women drank more than 14 units of alcohol per week in each year since 1986.

Mr. Bowis: The available information, derived from the general household survey, is shown in the table.

Percentage of women aged 18+ drinking over 14 units of alcohol weekly (England)

Year	Percentage
1986	10
1988	11
1990	11
1992	12

Notes:

1. Percentages rounded to the nearest whole figure.

2. The General Household Survey collects data on alcohol consumption in alternate years only.

Community Care

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has that the objectives of the community care policies are being met.

Mr. Bowis: We have an extensive monitoring programme in place. This has shown that local authorities have made a good start with the implementation of community care in the first year. This view has also been confirmed by reports from the Audit Commission and the Association of Directors of Social Services.

Pain

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of medical schools offer tuition in pain control.

Mr. Malone: A total of 100 per cent.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the number of people suffering from chronic pain.

Mr. Sackville: The prevalence of chronic pain is not known.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has commissioned on the chief causes of chronic pain; and with what results.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is an independent body deciding what research to support on its own expert judgment.

In 1992–93, the latest year for which figures are available, the MRC spent £237,000 on research into pain.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent pain relief is included in undergraduate medical training.

Mr. Malone: Knowledge and understanding of the relief of pain is taught in all university medical schools. They determine the extent of this teaching in the light of recommendations from the education committee of the General Medical Council, which has the statutory authority to determine the extent of the knowledge and skill required for the granting of primary medical qualifications in the United Kingdom.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of district health authorities have pain relief clinics.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally. It is for individual health authorities to commission hospital services that meet local needs including services for people with acute or chronic pain.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if pain relief is recognised as a specialty by her Department.

Mr. Sackville: No. This is primarily a matter for the medical profession in discussion with the Department.

Blood Transfusion

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to develop autologous blood transfusion.

Mr. Sackville: We are aware of the value of autologous transfusion for those patients where the procedures are applicable. In appropriate cases it can provide a useful supplement to the supply of blood from voluntary donors which the National Blood Service supplies to our hospitals. The medical profession is aware of autologous transfusion and advice is available from medical staff of the National Blood Service and hospital consultant haematologists. Selection of patients for this procedure has to be undertaken with extreme care to avoid any possible clinical risk to that patient.

Help us to Help You Campaign

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on the help us to help you campaign; and how effective the campaign has been.

Mr. Malone: The total cost of the help us to help you initiative has been £91,870. Monitoring to assess the effectiveness of local campaigns is a local responsibility. The national health service executive has found that help us help you messages are now widely featured in national health service information literature.

Adoption

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to set up an international adoption agency in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bowis: Our role is to receive applications from voluntary organisations for approval under section 3 of the Adoption Act 1976. We have not yet received any such application.

Performance-related Pay

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the annual administrative cost of performance-related pay for consultants;

(2) what savings on the total consultant staff budget will come from performance-related pay.

Mr. Malone: Our proposals are for the introduction of local pay arrangements in the national health service, not performance-related pay. The size of the consultants' pay bill depends on a number of factors including consultant expansion. It is for trusts to determine the cost of local schemes.

Mental Illness

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people (a) in the London implementation zone and (b) in each region suffer from mental illness.

Mr. Bowis: The information is not currently available centrally. A national survey assessing the extent of psychiatric morbidity in Great Britain is being carried out for the Department of Health by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. The results of the first part of the survey, covering the private household population, are due to be published later this year and will provide information both nationally and regionally on the nature and extent of mental illness among adults.

Hospitality Budgets

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the hospitality budget for her Department, the national health service executive and regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities and trusts in (a) 1993–94 (b) 1991–92 and (c) 1979–1980.

Mr. Sackville: Information on hospitality expenditure for regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities and trusts is not available centrally. Figures for the Department of Health are shown in the table.

	1993–94 £	1991–92 £
Department of Health	218,995	168,151
National Health Service Management Executive	88,846	35,803

Notes:

[1] Figures are not available prior to 1990–91.

[2] Figures have not been adjusted for inflation.

[3] Departmental figures include the Management Executive figures.

[4] Management Executive figures are not directly comparable from year to year because of organisational changes.

Cleveden Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contracts her Department, the national health service executive, regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities or trusts had with Cleveden Services.

Mr. Sackville: We have no records of any contracts between the Department of Health or the national health service executive and Cleveden Services.

Information on contracts held with individual contractors by regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities or trusts is not available centrally.

Sandwell General Practitioner Consortium

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to investigate Sandwell family health services authority, the general practitioner consortium and the limited company that ran it.

Mr. Malone: West Midlands regional health authority published the results of an investigation into the setting up of the Sandwell general practitioner consortium in May this year. Sandwell family health services authority is currently investigating the decision by general practitioners to leave the consortium.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for ethnic monitoring of the merit award system for consultants.

Mr. Malone: Ethnic monitoring is one of the issues to be addressed in the review of distinction awards.

Patient Records

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the guidance on confidentiality on patient records is to be published; and when guidance was initially drafted.

Mr. Sackville: Draft guidance on the confidentiality, use and disclosure of personal health information was issued for consultation on 10 August 1994, and copies of it are available in the Library. The consultation period ends on 9 December, and a final version will be published when we have considered the comments received. Work on drafting guidance on confidentiality first began in 1989.

Footwear

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the number of hospital referrals each year directly related to use of poor footwear.

Mr. Sackville: There is no information available on which to base such an estimate.

EU Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors from other EU countries have practised in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Comparable information is not available for general practitioners.

Hospital and community health service medical staff from European Union countries (by countries of birth) other than UK who were practising in England as at 30 September 1989–1993 (whole time equivalents)

1989	1,830
1990	1,740
1991	1,870
1992	1,900
1993	2,010

Figures are rounded to nearest 10.

Opportunity 2000

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to have the monitoring data for the Opportunity 2000 targets to be achieved by the end of the current year.

Mr. Sackville: Monitoring arrangements are in hand. The main findings will be published in 1995.

Ethnic Minority Health Unit

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the planned closure of the regional ethnic minority health unit.

Mr. Sackville: The closure of any regional unit would be the responsibility of the relevant regional health authority. The national health service ethnic health unit was established this year for a three-year period; it is located in Leeds and will cover ethnic health issues across the whole of the NHS in England.

Passive Smoking

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to limit the dangers of passive smoking.

Mr. Sackville: The Government will continue to publicise the dangers of passive smoking and to encourage the introduction of smoking policies in public places, public transport and the workplace. Good progress is being made in all those areas.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths were caused by passive smoking in each of the last five years; and what research findings she has on the illnesses caused by passive smoking.

Mr. Sackville: On the available data it is not possible to estimate a figure for all deaths attributable to passive smoking.

The available evidence on the health effects of passive smoking is summarised in paragraph 2·13 of "Smoke Free for Health" which was published in February 1994, copies of which are available in the Library.

The Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health is reviewing the available research findings on this issue.

Hospital Patient Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to collect data on the patient readmission rates of each hospital.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Ambulance Service, London

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to improve the London ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: Mr right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in December 1993 an additional £14·8 million investment in the London ambulance service for 1994–95, which the LAS is using to purchase new accident and emergency vehicles, to increase ambulance staff, provide additional paramedic training and make other improvements to services. This additional funding was linked to firm targets for improved response times—80 per cent. of emergency calls to be responded to within 14 minutes by September 1994 and 85 per cent. by April 1995 as interim stages to meeting the national standard of responding to 95 per cent. of calls within 14 minutes.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked Mr William Wells, the chairman of South Thames regional health authority, to produce a report into the LAS. The report will look into what changes need to be made in terms of:

working practices, including staff deployment and rostering systems the use of resources management/staff relation management and staff training

The report will be made to Ministers before Christmas and will be made public.

Home Visits

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the opportunities for patients to speak to a doctor prior to a home visit by that doctor.

Mr. Malone: In general, there should be no difficulty in speaking to a doctor before a home visit. However, it is for individual general practitioners to decide how to organise their patient contacts.

Caesarean Sections

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the rate of caesarean sections in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: I refer to the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor) on 18 May, Official Report, column 519.

Figures for 1992–93 are not yet available.

Junior Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to discipline consultants who continue to allow their junior doctors to work longer hours than those targets in her new deal for junior doctors.

Mr. Malone: None. I expect consultants to work with managers and junior doctors to help achieve the new deal targets.

Toxoplasmosis

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the incidence of (a) toxoplasmosis and (b) congenital toxoplasmosis in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The number of laboratory reports of toxoplasmosis in England and Wales during the past 10 years is shown in the table. It should be noted that those reports are not necessarily of new infections; some may be of chronic infection or represent results from repeat test on the same patient.

Information on the incidence of congenital toxoplasmosis each year is not routinely available.

Mental Health

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the mental health activity figures for each of the last five years for (a) the London implementation zone and (b) by region, per head of population.

Mr. Bowis: Information on in-patient activity is given in the "Ordinary and day case admissions for England, Financial Year 1992–93" copies of which are available in the Library.

Information available on rates per head of population is shown in the tables. The numbers are based on ordinary admissions and day cases. It should be noted that the figures relate to finished consultant episodes and not individual patients, as an individual may be admitted and discharged more than once.

Family Planning

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will list the family planning initiatives taken by her Department in the last 10 years which are aimed at men.

Mr. Sackville: The "Health of the Nation" strategy includes the clear objective for the national health service to ensure the provision of well-publicised and effective family planning services for those people who want them. That applies equally to men as to women.

The Department of Health funds a number of voluntary organisations which are working to ensure that the needs of men are addressed along with those of women.

Resources (Allocation)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what financial year she intends to start allocating resources for NHS hospital and community health services direct to district health authorities; and whether it is her policy for such allocations to reflect district data on (a) housing tenure, (b) the age structure of the population, (c) ethnic origin, (d) standardised mortality ratios, (e) socio-economic status, (f) unemployment or (g) self-reported sickness;

(2) on what date she received the report commissioned by her Department from York university on "A formula for Distributing NHS Revenues Based on Small Area Use of Hospital Beds"; whether she intends to base the formula for distributing NHS resources to district health authorities on its findings; and when she intends to announce her proposals for the funding formula for district health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: We received the results of a study we commissioned from York university in March 1994 and its report in July 1994. A modified formula based on the York analysis is to be used to inform allocations to regional health authorities in 1995–96. It will be for RHAs to decide which formula to use for their district health authorities.

In 1996–97, subject to legislation, there will be new health authorities embracing the functions of DHAs and family health services authorities. Work is in hand to look at an approach appropriate to those new circumstances.

The modified formula takes account of district data on age distribution and a wide range of health and socio-economic factors. Those include the categories to which the hon. Member refers with the exception of housing tenure which was included in the York analysis but not found to be statistically significant.

Variations in Health

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the terms of reference and list the membership, of the sub-group on variations in health established in her Department; when it was established; how often it has met; and when it will complete its work.

Mr. Sackville: The terms of reference of the sub-group on variations in health are:-

"For the current Health of the Nation Key Areas

> By Spring 1995 to prepare a report for the Chief Medical Officer as to how the Department of Health, and the National Health Service can make best use of existing information in tackling ethnic, geographical, socio-economic and gender variations in health status, with particular reference to the strength of observed relationships and evidence about the effectiveness of interventions.
> By the end of 1994 prepare a report for the Departmental Research Directorate on areas in which new epidemiological and research information is needed to inform the targeting of interventions for high risk groups of the population and further understanding of underlying processes relevant to policy on longer term intervention to support the public health information strategy with health variations aspects of its work".

The members of the sub-group are:-

Chairman:

Dr. Jeremy Metters—Deputy Chief Medical Officer

Members:

Dr. S. Adam
Director of Public Health, North Thames Region

Dr. J. Chambers
Director of Public Health, North Birmingham Health Authority

Prof. M. Marmot

Observers from the Medical Research Council, the Economic and Social Research Council and the Department [illegible] Health and Social Security, Northern Ireland, together with Department of Health officials also attend.

The sub-group was established in October 1993 and met for the first time on 17 May 1994. Since then it has met on two occasions. It expects to report to the timetable established in the terms of reference.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not keep records of the time taken to adjust clocks.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what grant she has given to organisations of and for disabled people for their international work in each of the last five years; for what purposes this money has been expended; if the payments made five years ago have retained their value; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Department makes grants available to a range of organisations for their work in representing the interests of disabled people within Europe and worldwide.

Grant aid is given as follows to the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and the British Council of Organisations of Disabled People to cover affiliation fees to international bodies and to help with the expenses of other international work. Other organisations in receipt of funds from the Department of Health may, of course, spend part of these on international work.

Grant Year	Grants Paid £	At 1990–91 prices £
1990–91	25,000	25,000
1991–92	29,000	26,248

Financial support is also given to the United Kingdom Helios Forum and to the national co-ordinating centres for work in connection with Helios, the European Union's disability programme as follows:

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much her Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by her Department, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on postage for 1990–91 to 1993–94 is shown in the table. Figures for 1989–90 are not available. Details of how many items have been posted in each of the last five years are not available.

1990–91	1,361,389
1991–92	1,266,438
1992–93	1,347,109
1993–94	1,353,998

Figures have not been adjusted for inflation.

Figures for the Department include the national health service executive but do not include the Department's agencies.

Medical Records

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure speedy access to medical records for people making medico-legal claims against health authorities.

Mr. Malone: Long-standing guidance advises national health service bodies to deal helpfully with requests for access to health records by patients engaged in legal proceedings. In addition, patients, or their representatives, have a legal right of access to their records under the Access to Health Records Act 1990. Discussions are currently taking place with the Law Society to see whether the arrangements for handling medico-legal claims in the national health service can be improved.

Richard Miles

Mr. Purchase : To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when she or any of her predecessors were informed of the case of Richard Miles and New Cross hospital, Wolverhampton; and what advice was offered by her Department to the local health authority;

(2) what costs have been incurred by the Wolverhampton health authority since 1980 in the case of Richard Miles, excluding the value of the compensation awarded to him.

Mr. Malone: A local health authority would not be expected to contact the Department of Health in respect of a medical negligence claim of this type until after the claim had been settled. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. R. M. [illegible], chairman of Wolverhampton health authority, for details of any costs incurred by the authority.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now consider bringing forward plans for a no-fault compensation scheme for victims of medical negligence.

Mr. Malone: We have no plans to introduce such a scheme in the national health service.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many public appointments (a) she is responsible for making and (b) require her approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if she will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1993", which details those public appointments that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State or Ministers acting on her behalf are responsible for making. I refer him to the reply I gave him on 7 March, Official Report, columns 80–81 for details of other appointments that are not identified in "Public Bodies".

Ampleforth School

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what contact she has had with the headmaster of Ampleforth school on the issue of prevention of measles and other diseases.

Mr. Sackville: The Government's Chief Medical Officer wrote to the headmaster of Ampleforth college on 26 October reminding him of the serious consequences to public health of rubella infection and issued a press release containing the text of his letter.

EMPLOYMENT

Investors in People Award

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers in each TEC area in England have been given the investors in people award; how many have made a commitment to meeting the standard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: The latest figures, at 11 September 1994, for employers in each training and enterprise council area in England who are either formally committed to or have been recognised as achieving the investors in people standard, are shown in the tables.

I am pleased that an increasing number of companies are recognising the benefits to their business performance of working towards the investors in people standard. Investors in people is a key initiative to encourage employers of all sizes, and in all sectors, to invest effectively in the skills that their businesses need. It plays a major role in improving Britain's competitiveness.

Training

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of (a) fatal, (b) major and (c) minor accidents on youth training and on training for work, shown by region, for the periods July to September 1993, January to March 1994, April to June 1994 and July to September 1994.

Mr. Paice: Table A gives the latest accident figures for youth training.

Table B gives the equivalent figures for training for work.

Notes:

(a) Employment Department figures for accidents to trainees have been compiled on a similar basis to those for employees prepared by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). However, these figures include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments, and road traffic accidents which would not have been reportable to HSE for employees.

(b) Major and minor injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

(c) North West Region and North West (Greater Manchester) Region were restructured in the quarter ending 30 June 1994 to form part of the Government Offices for the North West and for Merseyside. At the same time, Northern Region became part of the Government Offices for North East.

(d) Accidents figures requested for the period July to September 1994 are not yet available.

Minimum Wages

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what analysis he has made of the studies produced since 18 February 1993 which show a positive link between the existence of statutory minimum pay rates and the loss of or failure to create jobs; and of studies which show the reverse effect or no effect at all.

Mr. Oppenheim: Recent reports by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the International Monetary Fund support the Government's position that minimum wages cost jobs. This view was also acknowledged in the European Commission's White Paper on competitiveness. Studies by Machin and Manning which suggest otherwise have been criticised on the grounds of their approach.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were in employment (a) at the latest available date, (b) 10 years ago and (c) 20 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is given in the table:

Workforce in Employment: United Kingdom

	Thousands
June 1974	25,280
June 1984	24,399
June 1994	25,232

Job Creation Grants

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the grants which have been available from his Department to assist in investment or job creation in each of the last five years, (b) the number of grants given in each category, (c) the value of the grants, (d) the amount of investment created as a result, (e) the number of jobs created on the project assisted, (f) the criteria used in assessing the correctness of making the grants, (g) the criteria used in monitoring the sources of the grants, (h) the procedures used in this monitoring, (i) the number of grants and their value which had been reclaimed for financial or legal impropriety, (j) the number and value reclaimed for failing to achieve the criteria set and (k) the number and value reclaimed for other reasons.

Mr. Paice: No such grant assistance has been available from the Employment Department.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the Department's expenditure on postage in the last three financial years is shown in the table:

1991–92	£10·7 million
1992–93	£11·9 million
1993–94	£13·0 million

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment is responsible for 2,940 appointments listed in "Public Bodies 1993", including some which require his approval; 110 of these are to executive bodies, 782 to advisory bodies and 2,048 to other appointments.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is also responsible for making 19 appointments not listed in "Public Bodies", of which 12 are to advisory bodies and the rest to other bodies.

Heathrow Tunnel

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps he has taken to satisfy himself about the health and safety aspects of the tunnelling techniques being used for the Jubilee line extension near Heathrow airport; if these have previously been used in clay substrata; and if he will make a statement on these matters in relation to risk to lives and adjacent buildings;

(2) if he will make a statement on the collapse of the Heathrow express tunnels adjacent to Heathrow airport.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what tests were carried out on the suitability of the new Austrian tunnelling method for London ground conditions before approval was given to use this technique on both the Heathrow express and Jubilee line extension projects;

(2) what steps are being taken to reinforce those sections of the Jubilee line extension and the Heathrow express projects being built using the new Austrian tunnelling method;

(3) if he will list the transport projects in which the new Austrian tunnelling method is being used in the United Kingdom, identifying the specific areas affected;

(4) what steps are being taken to prevent the risk of further subsidence at Heathrow central terminal area;

(5) What evidence he has of ground movement at any of the other sites on Heathrow express and Jubilee line extension projects being built using the new Austrian tunnelling method;

(6) what checks have been carried out on the Jubilee line extension tunnels being constructed using the new Austrian tunnelling method following the collapse of the Heathrow express tunnel;

(7) what trial bores using the new Austrian tunnelling method in London clay were undertaken before its adoption for sections of the Heathrow express and Jubilee line extension projects;

(8) what has been the effect on the Piccadilly line of the collapse of the Heathrow express tunnel;

(9) what evidence his Department has received on the cause of the collapse in September 1994 of the tunnel in Munich being constructed with the new Austrian tunnelling method;

(10) when he expects to receive a report on the causes of the tunnel collapse at Heathrow on 21 October; and if he intends to make this report available to the public;

(11) when he expects the Piccadilly line between Heathrow terminal 1, 2 and 3 and Heathrow terminal 4 to resume normal service;

(12) what evidence he has on (a) the use of the new Austrian tunnelling method in ground conditions similar to those which exist in London and (b) the number of failures which have occurred;

(13) if tunnelling work involving the new Austrian tunnelling method has been halted on the sites in the United Kingdom where this method is being employed; and what conditions have been set with regard to the resumption of such tunnelling work.

(14) what investigations and checks were made by his Department into the safety of the new Austrian tunnelling method following the collapse of the Munich tunnel in September 1994 and prior to the collapse of the central terminal area tunnel at Heathrow.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the impact on the construction times and costs to the Heathrow express link and the Jubilee line extension arising from the Heathrow tunnel collapse.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have consulted my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport following the partial collapse of tunnels under construction at Heathrow airport.

In the early hours of Friday 21 October a ground slip led to a partial collapse into tunnels under construction on a section of the Heathrow express rail link at the central area of Heathrow airport. This section of the work involved the use of the new Austrian tunnelling method—NATM—in a complex of tunnels for a new station.

There were no injuries as a result of the collapse. Site safety procedures included sensors to detect ground movement. These gave early warning of abnormal movement. Emergency procedures were put into effect and workers were safely evacuated. There were two further ground slips over the weekend. They were almost certainly as a consequence of the initial event.

The contractors and their specialist advisers have set up an engineering task force to deal with the situation. Tunnelling has of course been stopped. The key task now is to stabilise the ground to prevent further subsidence and secure the safety of the remaining tunnels. The British Airports Authority and the contractors are working together to secure the continued safe operation of the airport and minimise inconvenience.

At the place where the Piccadilly line crosses the Heathrow express rail link tunnels, there has been no ground movement outside of the tolerances predicted before tunnelling began. The monitoring continues. London Underground has, however, suspended the use of the terminal 4 loop as a precaution. The central station serving terminals 1, 2 and 3 continues in service. A temporary bus link is connecting Hatton Cross station and terminal 4.

NATM has also been adopted for use on the Jubilee line extension project. Contractors on the project suspended the use of the NATM technique as a precautionary measure on the day of the collapse at Heathrow.

The Health and Safety Executive has asked for tunnelling not to restart at Heathrow, nor on the Jubilee line extension project, until it is clear that this can be done safely. The Health and Safety Executive has also asked London Underground to maintain its voluntary suspension of the railway loop until sufficient information is available to justify its safe restoration. The decision will be made in conjunction with HSE's railway inspectorate. HSE's inspectors are on site and keeping in touch with developments in the major remedial works undertaken by the contractors. The HSE is initiating checks of other significant construction projects currently using NATM.

NATM is a tunnelling method that has been used worldwide for over 40 years. The two largest projects under construction in the United Kingdom using NATM are Heathrow and the Jubilee line extension. A trial tunnel was driven at Heathrow in 1992 and the information and experience gained was used in developing the project. Further trials were carried out at London Bridge and Jubilee Gardens at the start of the Jubilee line extension project.

NATM is normally the first stage of a two-stage process involving the construction of a initial lining to provide short-term support followed by the construction of a further lining. There is no evidence that, once the work is finished, there is any significant difference between the safety and integrity of tunnels constructed in this way and those using more conventional techniques.

There was a failure, also during the construction phase, in Munich earlier this year. However, because the ground conditions were considered sufficiently dissimilar, there were no reasons to justify halting work in London. There have been no recorded instances of ground collapse once the construction phase of the tunnelling using NATM is complete.

The Health and Safety Commission has asked the Health and Safety Executive to undertake an investigation. The HSE has asked Mr. Stuart Nattrass, HM chief inspector of construction, to lead it. He will be seeking support from independent consultants of international standing. The investigation will initially concentrate on whether the failure at Heathrow is site specific. Once the initial findings are known, the investigation will go on to consider whether there are broader implications for the use of NATM as a construction technique. The evidence will be reviewed with a view to confirming that the safety of tunnels constructed in this way matches the safety of tunnels constructed using more conventional techniques and will take into account any lessons to be learned from the Munich incident.

Initial lines of inquiry will include whether:

(a) the design was defective;

(b) the execution of any construction work was defective;

(c) adverse ground conditions contributed to the failure.

The investigation has begun. Its findings will be made public. The HSE will consider whether there may have been breaches of health and safety legislation and, if so, what action to take.

It is too early to predict time and cost penalties which may result for the Heathrow express and Jubilee line extension as a result of the collapse on the Heathrow project.

SCOTLAND

Training Schemes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who collates the information supplied by managers of Government training schemes on the specific skills acquired by trainees; and where this information is published.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies are all involved in the collation of information supplied by managers of Government training schemes. I have asked the chairmen of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he uses to assess the value of Government training schemes; and if that information is publicly available.

Mr. Stewart: The information used by my right hon. Friend to assess the value of Government training schemes is the same as that which I set out in the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 25 February, Official Report, columns 435–37, save that cost figures are now available for 1993–94 as follows:

Cost	Youth training £ million	Adult training training for work £ million
1993–94	93·451	93·733

Information on Government training schemes is published as follows:

in "Serving Scotland's Needs", the Government's expenditure plans 1994–95 to 1996–97. Data are shown separately for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, for training for work—number of starts, percentage of leavers going into jobs, further education or training, percentage of leavers gaining recognised qualifications—and for youth training, with number of starts, percentage of participants with employed status, percentage of leavers gaining recognised qualifications; in the monthly "Employment Gazette" on training for work, youth training and business start-up—number of people participating number of starts;

in the monthly news release by the Scottish Office on training statistics for training for work, youth training and business start-up—number of programme participants number of starts on programme; and in the annual reports of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the outturn expenditure given to each local enterprise company in Scotland in 1992–93 at 1993–94 prices; and what is the budget for each training and enterprise council in 1993–94 in total and broken down in the same way as given in the written answer of 18 February 1993, Official Report, column 335.

Mr. Stewart: The budgets of local enterprise companies are a matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked their chairmen to write to the hon. Member. There are no training and enterprise councils in Scotland.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the most recent figures for waiting lists for operations in trust hospitals.

Mr Lang [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1994, Official Report, column 876]: More people are being treated in NHS hospitals than ever before. In the year to June 1994, the number of out-patients treated rose by 2·6 per cent., the number of in-patients treated rose by 1·6 per cent. and the number of day cases treated rose by no less than 18·4 per cent. I am arranging for all the most recent figures for waiting lists to be sent to the hon. Member and published in the Official Report.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of expenditure in the single regeneration budget for 1995–96 is expected to be allocated between each of the (a) public, (b) private and (c) voluntary sectors;

(2) if it remains his policy that the winning bids for the single regeneration budget funds will be announced in December.

Sir Paul Beresford: The timetable for the current single regeneration budget bidding round was set out in the bidding guidance published in April. We expect to announce decisions on the successful bids in January 1995.

Decisions will be made according to the criteria in the bidding guidance. There are no pre-set allocations between types of bidders or projects.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for a bidding round for the single regeneration budget in 1996–97.

Sir Paul Beresford: As I explained in my letter of 26 October to the hon. Member, the position on future bidding rounds will depend on the level of commitments from previous years and the outcome of the annual public expenditure review. This year's review is currently proceeding and decisions will be made following the Budget statement in November.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to change the 1994–95 cash limit and running costs limit for Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Atkins: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate for Ordnance Survey, class VII, vote 10, the cash limit has been increased by £1,357,000 from £14,856,000 to £16,213,000 to take up a capital end-year flexibility entitlement of 1,354,000, announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July, Official Report column 729–34, due to the slippage of payment for capital expenditure from 1993–94.

In addition, the running-cost limit has been increased by £3,000 from £16,162,000 to £16,165,000 due to a transfer of £3,000 from the Treasury in respect of repayment of the average property price list. The increases will be offset by a transfer and a claim on the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

PSA Services

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he proposes to make to the cash limit and running cost limit on PSA Services class VII, vote II in 1994–95.

Sir Paul Beresford: Subject to parliamentary approval, the cash limit for class VII, vote II, PSA Services, will be reduced by £32,000 from £98,693,000 to £98,661,000.

This reflects a public expenditure survey transfer with the Department for Education to cover the costs of relocating a member of PSA Services staff. The net running cost limit on this vote will also reduce by £32,000 from £98,293,000 to £98,261,000.

Industrial Waste

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to produce guidance on co-disposal of industrial wastes at landfill sites.

Mr. Atkins: Scientific co-disposal will continue to be an important waste management technique in this country for some years to come. We are therefore publishing today a consultation draft of waste management paper No. 26F on landfill co-disposal. The draft paper has been prepared by consultants using the results of recent scientific research on the chemical reactions that take place in landfills. Wastes managers and the statutory waste authorities will benefit particularly from the guidelines. The consultation period will be until 6 January 1995 and, subject to the results of the consultation, waste management paper No. 26F should be published in spring 1995.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 26 October 1994.]: The only occasion when a spouse accompanied a Minister from this Department in the past year was when my wife travelled with me to Greece for the EC informal Environment Council in May this year, at the invitation of the Greek Government, to join Ministers and their spouses from the other members of the European Union. The total cost to public funds was £736.10.

HEALTH

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) her Department and (b) her agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each, the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Sackville: A list of public opinion surveys commissioned since October 1992 will be placed in the Library. The costs of each survey are a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Consultation Papers

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all her Department's consultation papers including circulars and guidance notes issued since 1 January, together with the date by which comments were due on each of them.

Mr. Sackville: The Department regularly consults the national health service and other organisations about proposed new policies and procedures. Major consultation exercises since 1 January 1994 have been undertaken and details will be placed in the Library.

Guidance issued to the NHS, after any consultation, is usually sent as an Executive Letter, EL, or health service guidelines, HSG. A list of ELs and HSGs issued since 1 January will be placed in the Library.

Teenage Smoking

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for health what plans she has to tackle the problem of teenage smoking.

Mr. Sackville: The Health Education Authority is currently evaluating the recent five-year teenage smoking campaign. The lessons learned will be incorporated in the preparatory work now being done on a new £12 million three-year national anti-smoking campaign. Particular emphasis will be placed on addressing parents whose smoking habits and attitudes have a vital influence on the smoking behaviour of their children.

The Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health will consider the whole question of teenage smoking.

Psychiatric Patients

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute psychiatric beds there were in the area covered by the Government commissioned mental health task force in London in each of the last five years; and how many psychiatric patients were admitted to private beds in that area in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the number of acute psychiatric beds and the number of patients admitted to private beds is not available centrally.

Childcare

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities and trusts provide help with childcare for their staff in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women have been screened for cervical cancer; and how many women died from cervical cancer in each (a) family health service authority, (b) district health authority and (c) regional health authority in each year since 1987 and in 1994 to date.

Mr. Sackville: Information on cervical cancer screening is available centrally for financial years 1988–89 to 1992–93. For 1988–89, coverage information is available only as a national figure. From 1989–90 to 1992–93, it is available by region; for 1992–93 it is also available by district health authority. It is not collected centrally by family health services authority.

Cervical cancer mortality data by health authority region are available for the years 1987 to 1992. Mortality data by health authority are available in the Library in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys DH5 series.

Cost Effectiveness

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the cost-effectiveness of the national health services in relation to that of private health care.

Mr. Sackville: None. The cost-effectiveness of the national health service is not in doubt. The recent Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development report, "Assessment of United Kingdom Health Service Reforms", states that the NHS "was, and is, a remarkably cost-effective institution".

Heart Disease

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has on the cost-effectiveness of primary care practice nurses in relation to the effect of counselling on coronary heart disease risk factors.

Mr. Sackville: Research studies are under way that include the evaluation of nurse-administered health checks and advice in general practice. Two studies published interim results in January 1994; the OXCHECK study conducted in general practices in Oxfordshire, and the Family Heart Study Group's trials. These interim reports questioned the effectiveness of nurse-led interventions in relation to coronary heart disease prevention. The studies, however, were carried out before new arrangements for promoting health promotion in general practice were introduced on 1 July 1993. The new arrangements, which practice nurses have played a valuable part in implementing, focus particularly on coronary heart disease and are subject to continuing evaluation. The aim is to make optimum use of the skills of primary health care teams in monitoring and tackling the coronary heart disease risk factors in the population that they serve. A conference has been planned for later this year to consider the most recent research findings and their implications for further work in this area. Copies of the report can be found in the British Medical Journal of 29 January, which is available in the Library.

Renal Transplants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the names of the units in each region providing renal dialysis for renal transplant; and if she will identify the geographical gaps in the services.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally in the form requested, but a list of all renal dialysis units in England will be placed in the Library.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to her Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that the then Secretary to the Treasury, my hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell), gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 387.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much legal aid has been paid to George Walker in respect of recent court proceedings; and what is the estimate of the final costs.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Lawyers acting on behalf of George Walker have to date received legal aid payments amounting to £1,152,442. These are discretionary interim payments made in respect of proceedings in the Crown court. It is not possible at this stage to estimate what the final cost of the proceedings will be.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much to date has been paid from the legal aid fund to (a) Ian Maxwell and (b) Kevin Maxwell in respect of (i) criminal prosecutions against them and (ii) civil proceedings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Lawyers acting on behalf of Ian and Kevin Maxwell have received legal aid payments of £170,117 and £224,562 respectively for criminal proceedings in the magistrates courts. Details of payments to date in the Crown court are not readily available in the form requested.

In respect of civil legal aid, lawyers acting on behalf of Kevin Maxwell have so far received payments totalling £22,158. There have not been any payments to date in respect of civil proceedings involving Ian Maxwell.

Legal Publications

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to (a) add to or remove from the promulgation list any individuals or organisations and (b) require magistrates courts or other court centres to buy statutes and subordinate legislation direct from HMSO.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Existing arrangements for the provision of copies of legislation for the courts and others have been the subject of consultation with representatives of the parties affected and remain under consideration.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether the official promulgation list for the dissemination of statutes and subordinate legislation is still in operation; and if he will publish the names of the individuals and organisations who are entitled to free copies of such material.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Yes. Under arrangements with HMSO, copies of all Acts of Parliament and certain subordinate legislation are sent to magistrates courts, a small number of circuit judges and to local authorities at my Department's expense.

Trespass

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many actions for trespass have been brought in the civil courts in England and Wales since 1979.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information collected from the courts does not allow for this type of analysis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Proceedings

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what arrangements are being made to provide hon. Members with access to the clean television feed of parliamentary proceedings in accordance with the resolution of the House of 30 June.

Mr. Beith: The clean feed direct relay of proceedings of both Houses will be available on new-style colour television annunciators in the Palace and the outbuildings from the morning of the state opening on 16 November. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people shown in employment data in the annual abstract of statistics as being employed in (a) private and (b) public sector education between (i) part-time and (ii) full-time employees under appropriate headings including teachers, lecturers, ancillary staff, administrative staff, local authority officers and other appropriate heading where known, such analysis to be set out by type of educational establishment where appropriated, for 1979 and the most recent two years.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on public sector employment in the education industry is available only for the two occupational groupings, lecturers/teachers and other staff, and it is not available by type of educational establishment. The available information is given in the following table:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the difficulties being experienced by British humanitarian agencies in Liberia.

Mr. Baldry: Following the resumption of the civil war in early September, non-governmental organisation programmes have ceased in all areas except Monrovia. Latest reports from the Save the Children Fund show that 90 per cent. of the country is now inaccessible to humanitarian aid.

Albania

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in delivering European Union aid to Albania; and what effect the policy of Greece is having on this.

Mr. Baldry: The EU is providing a substantial volume of aid to Albania through the Phare programme: total commitments up to July 1994 were 84·6 mecu, of which 45 mecu had been disbursed by the end of 1993. However, there is a continuing and regrettable delay in agreeing the European Commission's proposal to provide macro-economic assistance of 35 mecu to Albania.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Funeral Services

Mr. Soley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the procedures for regulating practices and costs of funerals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: There are no such procedures.

Mr. Soley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to ensure that relatives of a deceased person are (a) consulted before a funeral operator embalms a body and (b) told the cost of embalming.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have no such proposals. Funeral arrangements are a matter for the client and the funeral director to agree upon.

Electricity Interconnector

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when green ticket payments on electricity received through the interconnector with France are due to end; when Electricité de France's exclusive monopoly lease of the interconnector expires; whether these issues will be examined during the current nuclear review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The Government are considering the future of the fossil fuel levy and the associated arrangements, including non-leviable status, in respect of nuclear generation as part of the nuclear review, and I cannot pre-judge the outcome.

I understand that the interconnector agreement between Electricité de France and the National Grid Company, which provides for EdF to lease NGC's assets in the interconnector, covers the period until 31 March 2001. However, trade across the interconnector is covered by separate commercial agreements, and the Government have received assurances from the French Government that access across the interconnector to the French electricity market is on a non-discriminatory basis.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to Executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 27 October 1994]: In total, I am responsible for 935 public appointments, of which 440 are appointments to executive bodies, 279 are appointments to advisory bodies and 216 are other appointments.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will respond to representations regarding a dispute between Bridgegate Engineering and the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wardle [holding answer 27 October 1994]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade responded on Thursday 27 October 1994.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Burundi

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent military activity there has been in Burundi; and what contribution the British Government are making to both humanitarian assistance and diplomatic endeavours to ensure peace and political development.

Mr. Baldry: The situation in Burundi remains stable but tense. We are not aware of any recent major military activity, although there have been reports of isolated incidents within the country, with the military attempting to disarm militant groups at the request of the new Government.

Since the abortive coup in 1993, the British Government have provided £1·79 million bilaterally to NGOs and UN organisations in Burundi. The UN Centre for Human Rights has a technical assistance programme in Burundi, to which the United Kingdom has contributed £100,000. The centre is now looking at ways to strengthen and expand its office there.

The UN is actively considering how best to increase international assistance to Burundi and the United Kingdom supports its proposal to hold an international conference in the region to discuss refugee problems.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether former Government troops are re-entering Rwanda; and what action is being undertaken by the Government of Zaire to prevent this.

Mr. Baldry: There have been unconfirmed reports of minor incursions across the Zaire-Rwanda border in the north-east and south-east sectors by armed bandits, some of whom are thought to be members of the former Government army.

Zaire's Government have asked for UN assistance in providing security in the refugee camps and to help segregate former military and militia from ordinary refugees. A UN report with recommendations is expected shortly.

Antigua and Barbuda

Mr. Mackinlay : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the provisions set out in the preamble of the Statute of Westminster 1931 have been extended to Antigua and Barbuda.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The constitutional convention recited in the preamble to the Statute of Westminster 1931 would apply to Antigua and Barbuda.

Act of Settlement

Mr. Mackinl[illegible] : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Commonwealth countries are able to amend, through legislation passed by their own Parliament, the Act of Settlement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 October 1994]: The Act of Settlement 1700 can be amended only by the Parliament of the United Kingdom.

Statute of Westminster 1931

Mr. Mackinley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those independent Commonwealth countries whose head of state is Her Majesty the Queen and whose constitution permits the extension to that country of an Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom under the provisions of section 4 of the Statute of Westminster 1931.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 October 1994]: This information can be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Goodlad: No record is kept of time spent on the adjustment of clocks.

Hours of Working

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff in his Department alter their hours of work or work overtime when the United Kingdom falls out of line with European time; and what is the total cost to his Department for the year of the non-alignment of United Kingdom time with standard European time.

Mr. Goodlad: No staff alter their hours or work overtime as a result of such time changes. Staff of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office already liaise with colleagues overseas who operate in many different time zones. No additional costs are incurred because of the non-alignment of United Kingdom time with standard European time.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the Nairobi peace talks about Sudan.

Mr. Goodlad: The last round of the peace talks in Nairobi between the Sudanese Government and the southern rebels ended on 7 September in stalemate over the issues of self-determination and secularisation. The four states sponsoring the talks are to continue their attempts to find a solution. We support them in this.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in normalising diplomatic relationships between Sudan and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: Since the expulsion of Mr. Streams in December 1993, we have not appointed a new ambassador to Sudan. We shall consider doing so at an appropriate time.

Government-owned Property

Mr. Denis MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the value of all properties owned by Her Majesty's Government in (a) Switzerland, (b) France, (c) the United States of America, (d) Japan, (e) Italy, (f) Belgium, (g) Canada, (h) Hong Kong, (i) Germany and (j) Russia.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested will not be available until the systematic valuation of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's overseas estate is further advanced. This work, at present being planned, is in preparation for the introduction of revised Government accounting methods—resource accounting—later in the 1990s.

GCHQ

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters of protest were received in the past 12 months by (a) British embassies and (b) high commissions concerning the 10th anniversary of the trade union ban at GCHQ.

Mr. Hurd: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Princess of Wales

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who attended the lunch with Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales at the British embassy in Washington on 22 October; and what was its cost.

Mr. Baldry: Those attending the lunch were:

Her Royal Highness The Princess of Wales
The British ambassador and Lady Renwick
Mrs. Hillary Rodham Clinton
Mrs. Bruce Babbitt
His Royal Highness Prince Bandar Bin Sultan

General and Mrs. Colin Powell
The hon. Kurt Schmoke and Dr. Patricia Schmoke
Miss Barbara Walters
Mr. Peter Westmacott
The hon. Douglas Wilder
Mr. and Mrs. Wolfensohn
Mr. and Mrs. Michael York

The cost was part of the normal functioning of the embassy. The full cost cannot be readily identified.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Shotgun Licence Fee

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to raise the shotgun licence fee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 20 July, column 282. I laid before the House on 13 October an order to increase the fee for the issue of a shotgun certificate and other fees under the Firearms Act. On the same day, a separate order was laid to extend the life of both shotgun and firearms licences from three to five years.

Jourdain Society

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the constitution of the Jourdain Society meets all the requirements to warrant its continued charitable status;

(2) if he will make a statement on the charitable status of the Jourdain Society;

(3) what assessment the Charity Commission has made of the current functions and role of the Jourdain Society in relation to its charitable status.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The charitable status of a particular body, and the appropriateness of its constitution, are matters for which responsibility rests with the Charity Commission and, ultimately, the courts.

I am advised that the Jourdain Society is registered with the Charity Commission on the basis of the objects expressed in its constitution, and that those objects are charitable in law. However, there has not been a recent assessment of the function and role of the Jourdain Society and the effect that these could have on its charitable status.

If the hon. Member has any concerns about the society, he should write to the chief charity commissioner.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for 1992–93 and 1993–94 the amount spent in each London borough, with totals for each TEC area, under each of the programmes now incorporated into the single regeneration budget, regardless of whether the sums were paid to the borough council, and the amount allocated to be spent in 1994–95 on the same basis.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford), yesterday.

Private Security Companies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the change in the number of private security companies over the past 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations exist to prevent a person with a criminal record from offering security services, including street patrols.

Mr. Maclean: There are none.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of drug finds in each prison in England and Wales since 1 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox dated 28 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about drug finds in each prison in England and Wales.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he is having, and with whom, as to restricting the number of days that a remand prisoner in England and Wales can be held on remand before his case comes before a court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The period for which a defendant may be held in custody on remand is restricted by the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987 to 56 days pending summary trial or, where a case is dealt with on indictment, to 70 days from first appearance to committal and 112 days from committal to arraignment. The Government keep these limits under constant review.

Probation Work Training

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has of the number of places sponsored by his Department on accredited schemes for probation work training in 1995;

(2) what changes he proposes to the entry requirements for those wishing to qualify as probation officers.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We have not yet reached conclusions on the report of a recent scrutiny of the recruitment and qualifying training of probation officers, or on 1995 sponsored qualified training places.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places on accredited schemes for probation work training were sponsored by this Department in each of the most recent five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: From 1990 to 1994, the annual intake of students sponsored by the Home Office was as follows:

	Number
1990	336

Mr Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions have been made to ensure that (a) Members of Parliament and (b) any member of the public can gain access to a copy of the United Kingdom's fourth periodic report under the international covenant on civil and political rights to the United Nations.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Copies of the report are available in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament, the British Library, the other legal deposit libraries and from the Home Office publications unit.

Cycling

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to deal with cycling on pavements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The enforcement of road traffic law, including cycling offences, is a matter for chief officers to police in their respective force areas. It is for them to decide what priority should be given to any particular aspect of their road traffic responsibilities.

British Citizenship

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from whom and on what dates he has received representations in respect of the applications for British citizenship of Mr. Ali Al Fayed and Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to a question from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) yesterday. Some of those who made representations wrote on behalf of Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed as well.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he first made clear to the then Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle), that he wished the application for British citizenship of Mr. Ali Al Fayed to be decided by him.

Mr. Howard: On the first occasion on which I spoke to my hon. Friend concerning this case, I made it clear that I wished the application to be decided by him. The date of that conversation is not recorded.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for citizenship currently awaiting a decision were made less than six months ago, between six and 12 months ago, between 12 and 18 months ago and more than 18 months ago.

Prison Disturbances

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the total cost (a) to the Prison Service and (b) to the contractors of disturbances at Doncaster prison; whether default notices were served; and what financial penalties were applied;

(2) what was the total cost (a) to the Prison Service and (b) to the contractors of disturbances at Blakenhurst prison; whether default notices were served; and what financial penalties were applied;

(3) what were the total costs (a) to the Prison Service and (b) to the contractors of disturbances at the Wolds prison; if default notices were served; and what financial penalties were applied.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock dated 28 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the costs to the Prison Service and to the contractor of disturbances at Wolds, Blakenhurst and Doncaster; if default notices were served; and what financial penalties were applied.

Any costs met by the contractor are a matter for them as they do not involve public funds. The cost of prisoner damage at Doncaster are met entirely by the contractor. The cost of damage caused by prisoners at Wolds and Blakenhurst is identifiable, but of those costs the amount attributable to disturbances is not identifiable separately. There have been no default notices issued as a result of disturbances at Wolds, Doncaster and Blakenhurst. No other financial penalties have been imposed, other than those outlined in Mr. Butler's reply to you on 28 April 1994 (Official Report column 244).

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of occasions on which police officers have been called to Doncaster prison since 20 June to the latest available date; and how many officers have been called on each occasion.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock dated 28 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of occasions on which police officers have been called to Doncaster prison, from 20 June to the latest available date, and how many officers have been called on each occasion.

Police attendance to Doncaster prison has been sought on seven occasions since 20 June. On three occasions police were responding to incidents involving visitors; on two occasions they attended a death of a prisoner; one occasion was to help deal with a concerted act of indiscipline by prisoners, and one to recapture an escapee.

The number of police officers involved varied according to the operational need as determined by the local police and is not recorded at the prison.

Police Cells

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to his Department of keeping prisoners in police cells, broken down by police authority, in 1994 to the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle dated 28 October 1994.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the 33 former Prison Service employees who subsequently worked for private companies operating or tendering to operate prisons, referred to in the reply given by Peter Lloyd to Joan Ruddock on 14 July 1994.

Mr. Redwood: No record is kept of such estimates.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the building and repairs backlog in schools in each of the local education authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend and I have made no such estimate. Local education authorities are responsible for the repair and maintenance of their school buildings.

Publicity

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of his Department's spending on publicity on television, radio, newspapers, and in other ways for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not readily available in the form requested, but percentage rates for the standard housing association grant in Wales are available since 1988, and are set out as follows:

	Percentage

1988–89	55
1989–90	72
1990–91	75

2. In some years the rate was changed in-year to reflect interest rate movements, and was paid at different levels for different geographical areas.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage housing represented of total Government spending in 1978–89 and in 1993–94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1978–79, the Welsh housing programme was £168,000,000 and represented 11·3 per cent. of the total public expenditure within the Secretary of State's responsibility. In 1993–94, it represented 9·5 per cent. This is a real term increase of 24·8 per cent. after allowing for the rise in the cost of living.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the future of the blood transfusion service in Wales, indicating the number employed in the service in Wales.

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Health Common Services Authority and the National Blood Transfusion Service (Wales) are undertaking a review of future management arrangements of the service. A report will be submitted to the Welsh Office in due course. The whole time equivalent number of staff employed in the service is 227.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning speech therapy for (a) children and (b) stroke victims.

Mr. Richards: The provision of speech therapy is a matter for district health authorities and GP fundholders to determine in the light of local needs, priorities and resources, taking into account national guidance.

Disruptive Pupils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning troubled and disruptive children in schools; and what initiative he will undertake.

Mr. Richards: The response to disruptive behaviour must always be appropriate to the circumstances. Headteachers are responsible for maintaining discipline in schools. The Welsh Office will shortly issue guidance to local education authorities and schools on the education of children with emotional and behavioural difficulties.

SCOTLAND

Health Care International

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contributions Health Care International in Clydebank has made to training in the national health service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Training in medicine and in nursing is dependent on the clinical services being provided. In the short time that HCI has operated in Clydebank, the contribution to training in the Scottish health service has therefore been very small.

Long-stay Learning Disability Hospitals

Ms Jowell : To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people with learning disabilities are resident in long-stay hospitals; and if he will list the long-stay learning disability hospitals still operating.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of residents with a length of stay of at least one year in hospitals for people with learning difficulties is shown in the table.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) summary procedures and (b) solemn procedures were initiated by the procurator fiscal based in Peterhead in each year since 1976.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to provide information on the number of proceedings initiated by the procurator fiscal. The number of summary and solemn case disposals is set out in the table. Summary proceedings are initiated by the procurator fiscal and solemn proceedings on indictment on the instructions of Crown counsel.

Shipping Subsidies Review

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his decision following the shipping subsidies review.

Mr. Lang: After very careful and detailed consideration of a range of options, I have concluded that the present arrangements for Caledonian MacBrayne represent the most cost-effective and satisfactory way of providing support for lifeline ferry services to the islands off the west coast of Scotland. I am satisfied that CalMac operates economically and efficiently under the present arrangements and provides a service of high quality and reliability.

Of course, there is always room for improvement in financial performance, while maintaining and developing standards of service. Caledonian MacBrayne is making significant efficiency gains under the stimulus of the review and discussions with the company are taking place on the setting of new financial, efficiency and quality of service targets to help sustain the progress.

Following a thorough review of arrangements for financial support for shipping services, I have concluded that the current tariff rebate subsidy scheme for freight and passengers is in need of revision. It is complicated to administer and is not well matched to the present market for passenger and freight services in Orkney and Shetland. First, it does not provide a satisfactory basis on which the long-term viability of the essential passenger service, which also carries accompanied cars and some freight, can be assured. Secondly, it has encouraged the creation of excess subsidised capacity in freight markets, which has led to the under-utilisation of vessels, price instability and uncertainty as to the long-term viability of shipping operators.

Revised subsidy arrangements will be introduced to secure the future of the essential passenger service to and from Orkney and Shetland, in line with the Government's commitment to continued support, where necessary, for shipping services to the islands. I intend, subject to the approval of Parliament and of the European Commission, to change the method of subsidy to a block grant payable over a period of years in accordance with a contract to operate a specified level of service. In the interim, TRS will continue to be applied to passenger and accompanied car fares.

TRS will also be retained for shipments of livestock from the islands, at a revised level of subsidy. I am confident that these arrangements will ensure that farmers on the islands will continue to be able to get their animals to market without unreasonable transportation costs.

In line with evidence of over-capacity in the supply of freight services, I am satisfied that competition for the carriage of freight, other than exported livestock, is such that subsidies are no longer necessary to enable freight services to Orkney and Shetland to be provided at reasonable cost. These subsidies will be withdrawn with effect from 1 May 1995. Freight rates for all types of cargo are expected to remain close to existing levels.

We are continuing to give detailed consideration to the future arrangements for freight services to the west coast and I shall announce my decisions in due course.

The improvements in security of essential services and in value for money from the Government's substantial support for shipping services to and from the islands, which will be achieved through these decisions, demonstrate the benefits of our decision to carry out the review.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is (a) the location (b) the number of and (c) arrangements for using lithotripsy machines in the Scottish health service;

(2) if he will make a statement on the treatment of patients with kidney stones.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: Lithotripsy services in the Scottish health service are provided by Scottish Lithotriptor Centre at the Western General hospital, Edinburgh. The service is comprised of a static lithotriptor on the Western General site and a mobile unit, which is available for use throughout the health service in Scotland. The mobile unit is managed by the Scottish Lithotriptor Centre, but local hospital consultants operate it, treating their own patients in their own areas on an out-patient or day-case basis.

The treatment of patients with kidney stones is a matter for health boards who purchases appropriate services, including lithotripsy, based on an assessment of local need. The type of treatment patients receive is a matter for clinical decision.

Family Law

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans the Government have to bring Scottish child law in line with the principles set out in the UN convention on the rights of children;

(2) what action has been taken to consider whether law, policy and practice in Scotland concerned with juvenile justice and protection of children from violence are in full compliance with all provisions in the UN convention on the rights of the child.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The principles of the UN convention underlie the proposals for child care policy and law set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Children", Cm 2286. We intend the children's hearings system to continue to play a crucial role in the care of children in Scotland and the White Paper contains proposals for strengthening that role. The necessary legislation is in the course of preparation and will be introduced when parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Government have to introduce legislation in Scotland allowing for the exclusion of child abusers from the family home.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The White Paper "Scotland's Children", Cm 2286, indicated the Government's intention to introduce an exclusion order for the protection of children. The necessary legislation is in the course of preparation and will be introduced when parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland plans the Government have to implement the recommendations of the 1992 Scottish Law Commission report on family law; and when the legislation will be placed before the House.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State plans to implement certain recommendations of the Scottish Law Commission report on family law, particularly those relating to parental responsibilities and rights. The necessary legislation is in the course of preparation and will be introduced when parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Government have to implement the recommendations of Lord Clyde in his 1991 report on the Orkney child abuse inquiry; and when the legislation will be placed before the House.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The proposals in the White Paper, "Scotland's Children", Cm 2286, reflect the recommendations of and consultations on Lord Clyde's report and other reports published from 1990 onwards. Many of Lord Clyde's recommendations related to social work practice and procedure, and action to implement these is in hand. Revised guidance on aspects of child protection is now at an advanced state of preparation. Other changes require legislation. This is in the course of preparation and will be introduced when parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what areas existing Scottish child law breaches the principles accepted by the British Government following their ratification of the UN convention on the rights of children.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The welfare of the child is at the centre of the child care provisions of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. This is in keeping with the principles of the UN convention. In ratifying the convention, the Government noted a detailed reservation on article 37(d), which takes account of the operation of the children's hearings system in Scotland. The White Paper, "Scotland's Children", Cm 2286, proposed changes in policy and law which are consistent with the principles of the convention.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to bring forward proposals for statutory assistance to Scottish children aged 16 to 18 years who were in local authority care; and what comparison he has drawn with systems in force outside Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: Local authorities already have a statutory duty to provide assistance to young people under 18 if they have been in care immediately before school-leaving age. As was indicated in the White Paper, "Scotland's Children", Cm 2286, the Government propose to extend this duty to include young people aged 18 and to provide local authorities with a power to assist such young people under the age of 21 who meet the criteria of eligibility and need. These arrangements will stand satisfactory comparison with the other countries in the United Kingdom. The necessary legislation is in the course of preparation and will be introduced when parliamentary time permits.

TRANSPORT

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each the subject, objectives, total cost, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Mr. Norris: The information is not available in the form requested.

London Cycle Network

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken to ensure that the funds from the London boroughs' joint bid for the London cycle network will be used to implement co-ordinated routes.

Mr. Norris: We are currently considering a bid from London local authorities for Government funding of a five-year programme covering 1300 km of the London cycle network. If the bid is successful, it will be for the local authorities to co-ordinate the implementation of the project.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has drawn from the Transport statistics journey times survey 1993; and how Government strategy to reduce congestion in London and other cities will be influenced.

Mr. Norris: The 1993–94 survey is the first in a cycle of three annual surveys to measure trends in travel times for each of the main modes. The results will inform the development of policies to improve the efficiency of the road, rail and bus networks and to assist the safe movement of cyclists and pedestrians.

Taxi Regulation

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on proposals for the future regulation of taxis and private hire vehicles.

Mr. Norris: Shortly.

Capital Transport Campaign

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the proposals put forward by the Capital Transport Campaign for the regeneration of London's public transport infrastructure.

Mr. Norris: I give appropriate consideration to all proposals put to me on the future of London's public transport infrastructure.

Performance Markings

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether a member of staff with a box 1 performance marking transferred to another Government Department would receive the appropriate box 1 performance pay from their new Department.

Mr. Norris: The arrangements for performance pay for staff transferring between Departments are at the discretion of the importing Department.

Bus Stops

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures exist to prevent the parking of private cars at bus stops.

Mr. Norris: Traffic authorities can make orders under section 1 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984—under section 6 of the Act in London—restricting or prohibiting private cars from stopping, waiting, loading or unloading at bus stops. Enforcement of these orders is a matter for the police, except in London, where, apart from red routes and a few other minor exceptions, it is the responsibility of local authorities.

Cyclists

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department records statistics for accidents involving cyclists riding on the pavement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Figures are shown in the table.

Accidents involving pedal cycles on pavements: Great Britain 1990–93

Accidents

Accident Severity	1990	1991	1992	1993
Fatal	5	3	4	3

Land Sales

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he has ensured that any land disposed of by his Department has been put to productive use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. Haynes to Mr. Andrew Welsh dated 28 October 1994.

As you probably know, since the creation of the Highways Agency in April this year, it falls to me, as Chief Executive, to write to MPs who have tabled questions on matters which relate to operational matters of the Highways Agency and to give the information requested.

In answer to your question about how we ensure that any land we dispose of is put to productive use I would explain that, under Treasury rules, Government Departments and their Agencies are required to dispose of surplus land and property within three years of being so identified, subject to the need to realise the full value for the Exchequer. Once land or property has been sold and is no longer in our ownership, it is for the new legal owner to decide how he wishes to utilise his acquisition.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of printing and distribution of leaflets informing members of the public of the procedure to report excessively smoky heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles; how many leaflets have been distributed; and what has been the cost of operating the smoky vehicle hotline between April 1993 and March 1994.

Mr. Norris: The costs of printing and distribution were £13,771. Some 150,000 leaflets have been distributed to date. The cost of operating the hotline between April 1993 and March 1994 was about £5,500.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Steven Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Financial Secretary on 30 November 1993 column 387.

Cones Hotline

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many calls and complaints have been received by the cones hotline in each month since its inception (a) relating to the east midlands and (b) nationally; and how many of them resulted in cones being removed in each category;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the cones hotline; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts [holding answers 18 July and 26 October 1994]: As the cones hotline is now an operational matter for the Highways Agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paddy Tipping dated 28 October 1994:

You asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Cones Hotline; and if he will make a statement. As this is an operational matter for the Highways Agency, I am replying to your question.

The Cones Hotline was established in June 1992. It gives motorists direct access to the Highway Agency responsible for the motorway and trunk road network in England.

It is covered by the Highways Agency's "Road User's Charter", which sets out standards of service for the road network. In following this, the Highways Agency undertakes to deal with Hotline enquiries as efficiently as possible and, if it is established that there is no good reason for cones to be present, we undertake to have them removed.

You also asked for specific information on the Cones Hotline.

At 20 October 1994 this year, the total number of calls received by the Cones Hotline since its inception was 10,027. Of these, 5,141 have been pursued as formal complaints for requests for information. We cannot provide information by area for the remainder of the calls as they were resolved over the phone.

Monthly figures nationally, and for the East Midlands, are set out over:

	National	East Midlands
Up to 31.3.94	1,791	165
April	546	49
May	549	30
June	625	31
July	495	22
August	377	29
September	484	24
October (to 20.10.94)	274	19
	5,141	369

There have been three cases where enquiries established that cones should not have been in place and were therefore removed. In all cases cones have been found to have been present for sound operational or safety reasons.

I hope this information is helpful.

Public Transport (Fares)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the implications of the possible imposition of VAT on public transport fares for (a) increased use of private cars and traffic congestion and (b) air pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply. Tax changes are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget on 29 November. As the hon. Gentleman will appreciate, I am unable to comment at this time on the level of consideration given to any particular matter.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Norris: No record is kept of such estimates.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the privatisation which his Department has promoted since 1979, indicating, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Sproat: My Department has not promoted any privatisation since it was set up in 1992.

EDUCATION

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the privatisations which her Department has promoted since 1979, showing, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Forth: No organisations within my right hon. Friend's current area of responsibility have been privatised since 1979.

Education Psychologists

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the future of funding for the training of teachers as education psychologists.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is aware of the concerns that have been expressed about the way in which training of education psychologists is currently funded through the grants for education support and training programme. Discussions between officials of the Department and the local authority associations are exploring the possibilities of other methods of funding the training.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much each local education authority was recharged in respect of grant-maintained schools in its area in the latest year for which information is available; what this value was for each pupil in the grant-maintained sector in that local education authority area; and what was the equivalent pupil cost in local authority schools for each local education authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested will take some time to collate. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Tobacco Farming

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total cost to the European Union of subsidies to tobacco farmers in the EU; how many farmers benefit; in which countries; and how much they are paid.

Mr. Jack: The latest estimate of Community expenditure on the tobacco sector for 1994 is 1,807 mecu or £839 million[1]. It is estimate that 200,000 families are directly involved in tobacco growing within the Community, and up to four times as many indirectly. Tobacco production occurs in seven member states: Italy, Greece, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Germany and France. Community expenditure in each of these in 1993, the latest year for which a breakdown of figures between member states is available is as follows:

	Mecu	£ million
Belgium	10·00	7·9
Germany	43·91	34·5
Greece	548·02	430·5
Spain	109·64	86·1
France	68·95	54·2
Italy	370·23	290·9
Portugal	14·40	11·3
Total	1165·15	915·3

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much tobacco grown in the EU is consumed in the EU; and how much goes into intervention or is destroyed, in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The latest estimate for the 1993 harvest shows that the Community produced 337,968 tonnes of tobacco, imported 417,493 tonnes, exported 209,738 tonnes and consumed 545,723 tonnes. There is currently about 13,320 tonnes in intervention from the 1993 harvest and before. Intervention is not available for harvests after 1993. There are no Community provisions allowing the destruction of subsidised tobacco.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when Ministers will make regulations for the residuary milk marketing board for England and Wales

Mr. Waldegrave: Regulations have today been laid before Parliament. They will come into force on 1 November, vesting day for the new milk marketing arrangements.

The regulations set out the functions, powers and constitution of the residuary England and Wales milk marketing board. The residuary MMB will be responsible for winding up the milk marketing board's affairs, having regard to the interests of registered producers. Its functions will include the management of its retained assets pending disposal and the discharge of its retained liabilities. The residuary MMB will be responsible for collecting payments from buyers for milk sold in October, for paying producers for their October milk and for finalising the accounts of the MMB for the period leading up to vesting day. Among its functions will be to determine future ownership arrangements for Dairy Crest and National Milk Records.

Any surplus assets remaining after the residuary MMB has discharged all its liabilities will be distributed to eligible producers. The regulations set out in detail producers' entitlements to a share of any such surplus. These match the provisions of the milk marketing board's approved reorganisation scheme.

The members of the residuary MMB will be appointed by Ministers. The board may consist of up to seven members, including the chairman. Up to three members may be producers. Appointments will be for a period of up to two years and will be renewable. Members' remuneration will initially be set by Ministers. The residuary MMB will ask producers to approve members' remuneration at each annual general meeting from 1996 onwards.

We outlined the arrangements relating to the residuary MMB which the milk marketing board proposed as part of its reorganisation scheme in our consultation document on the scheme issued in March. We also set out the effects of modifications made to these in a document issued when the scheme was approved in June. Copies of these documents were placed in the Library of the House. The regulations were drawn up after consultation with interested parties in August.

TREASURY

Airport Departure Tax (Lourdes Pilgrimages)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to exempt travellers whose fares have been paid for by charities on pilgrimages to Lourdes from the airport departure tax.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. and Learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's intention is for air passenger duty to be a simple, broad-based tax at low rates with the minimum number of reliefs. The Government recognise that charities, including those such as the Handicapped Children's Pilgrimage Trust, carry out extremely useful work, but it would not be appropriate to protect them from the general indirect taxes that apply to all other consumers. The Government's preferred way of helping charities is through covenant, gift aid and payroll-giving schemes.

Economic and Finance Council

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Finance Ministers meeting on 21 October; and under what legislative authority and for what purpose the Council determined to reduce a fine imposed on two member states.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 25 October, which states that the effect of the council decision will be to increase, not reduce, the penalties suffered by the member states in question by some 1·1 becu.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of discretion the VAT authorities have in deciding whether to defer or cancel the collection of VAT from a firm.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The care and management of VAT is the statutory responsibility of the commissioners of Customs and Excise, whose discretion must be exercised reasonably in the circumstances of each case.

DEFENCE

Defence Animal Centre

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the chief executive of the Defence Animal Centre, Melton Mowbray, for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Soames: The chief executive of the Defence Animal Centre has been set the following key targets for 1994–95, the agency's first year of operation:

(1) Establish service level agreements or equivalent with all major customers and suppliers.

(2) Meet at least 95 per cent. of the standard of service targets laid out in the SLAs.

(3) Increase overall business efficiency by at least 2·5 per cent.

(4) Implement the options for change reduction in manpower with minimal reduction in output.

(5) Develop an output-costing system which will measure the resources used to produce various outputs.

(6) Adopt a common syllabus for joint service dog training.

(7) Complete market testing feasibility study.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Official Report

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will hold consultations with local library authorities with a view to increasing the number of subscriptions to the Official Report.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Local authority libraries are well aware of the arrangements under which they can receive 50 per cent. discount on all HMSO publications, including the Official Report.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, column 391.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mrs. Betty Maxwell

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to stop the publication and serialisation of works by Mrs. Betty Maxwell; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: As a result of representations made to me, my officials approached Macmillan Publishers Limited to ascertain whether they would be willing to provide an advance copy of the proposed book, "A Mind of My Own", by Elisabeth Maxwell and their co-operation was forthcoming. Having considered the book and taken advice from both junior and leading counsel, I concluded that its contents are not such as would justify an application to the High Court to restrain publication as being likely to create a substantial risk that the course of justice in the forthcoming criminal proceedings arising from the collapse of the Maxwell companies will be seriously impeded or prejudiced.

Macmillan Publishers Limited has been informed of the decision. My officials have made it clear to it that the conclusion reached by me relates only to the material which has been made available to me. If any material generated as part of the process of launching the book gives rise to concern, such material will need to be considered on its own merit. The same considerations apply also to reviews, comment or other reporting which may be triggered by publication of the book.

I have not sought or received material from Times Newspapers Limited, which owns the serialisation rights in relation to the book. It has, however, been informed of the conclusion reached and that it can relate only to the book as a whole. It is aware that separate consideration would need to be given to any serialisation which gave rise to concern as the result of editing or presentation which has been done in such a way as to alter the overall impact and effect of the book.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Attorney-General what changes he proposes to the Crown Prosecution Service's cash and running costs limits for 1994–95.

The Attorney-General: Yes. The cash limit for the Crown Prosecution Service administration vote, class IX, vote 6 will be reduced by £80,000 from £229,472,000 to £229,392,000. Within this total, the Department's running costs limit will be reduced by £80,000 from £224,472,000 to £224,392,000.

The decrease in the case limit and the running costs limit results from a transfer of funds to the Department of Social Security, class XIII, vote 4. The transfer will permit the Department of Social Security to meet the costs of prosecuting those cases which it has been agreed that it should prosecute in accordance with the criteria set out in R.V. Stafford Magistrates Court ex parte Commissioners of Customs and Excise [1991] 2 All ER 201.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Hunting

Mr. Flynn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what proposals he has to raise the subject of a ban on fox hunting and stag hunting on church land at the appropriate forum.

Mr. Alison: None. The Church Commissioners' long-standing policy on fox hunting is that our tenants should follow their own consciences in deciding whether or not to allow hunts on to land in their care. Our tenancy agreements do not, therefore, reserve the right of hunting to the landlord. This right rests with the tenant. No stag hunting takes place on land owned by the Church Commissioners.

HEALTH

Measles and Rubella Vaccine

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work her Department is currently undertaking to develop a measles and rubella vaccine which is not dependent on a strain developed from cells from an aborted foetus.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not undertake vaccine development. MRC5, the cell culture in which the rubella vaccine is prepared, is used worldwide and no further foetal material has been involved since its development in 1966. Industry is not, as far as we are aware, seeking other culture media. However, there are many research groups actively investigating the application of new technologies such as the use of recombinant proteins for vaccine development. Such new vaccines may not require viruses to be grown in present cell culture methods.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the foetus, whose cells were used to develop the vaccine against measles and rubella being used in the current campaign to vaccinate all school children, had been aborted.

Mr. Sackville: All rubella vaccines, including the rubella vaccine being used in the measles and rubella schools immunisation campaign, are grown in cell culture whose cells are called MRC5. This cell line was developed from a small number of cells taken from a single foetus in 1966 and the cells have grown and replicated since and been used widely for growing viruses. The termination of pregnancy was carried out on medical grounds in a national health service hospital. No further foetal material has been involved since 1966. The vaccine is highly purified and does not contain any foetal tissue. There is no question of use of this vaccine enabling anyone to profit from a termination of pregnancy.

Measles vaccine is prepared on chick embryo tissue.

Aerosols

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those medical aerosols known to her Department that now contain chlorofluorocarbon gases.

Mr. Sackville: Records held by the Medicines Control Agency show that there are 184 products containing chlorofluorocarbons licensed under the Medicines Act for human use at present. A small number, which are listed, contain chlorofluorocarbons as active ingredients. The remainder contain chlorofluorocarbons used as excipients, usually in the form of a propellant. It is not normal practice to disclose excipients, since to do so could prejudice companies' commercially sensitive information, which they are required to provide to obtain a product licence.

Product Licences with Chlorofluorocarbons
Product Name
Deep Freeze Aerosol Spray
PR Freeze Spray (liquid aerosol)
Pain Relief Spray
Stingo (aerosol spray)
Ultrakool Aerosol Spray
Pharmaethyl (pressurized gas - aerosol presentation)
Burnzap
Fluothane
Ethrane or Enflurane (generic name)
[illegible]e or Isoflurane (generic name)
Isoflurane
Alyrane (nonflammable liquid)

Both the Government and industry are working towards replacement of CFC-containing medicinal products.

Influenza

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many working days on average are lost annually because of influenza.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected by the Department.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the national health service of each influenza vaccination.

Mr. Sackville: The basic cost of a pre-filled syringe of influenza vaccine is approximately £5.10. Reimbursement and remuneration for the general practitioner is about £1.00 per patient; this payment forms part of the general practitioner's total payment for providing general medical services.

Condoms

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of state for health if (a) dispensing general practitioners and (b) non-dispensing general practitioners are able, under terms and condition of service, to sell condoms to their patients.

Mr. Malone: General practitioners cannot sell condoms to their national health service patients.

General Practitioners

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to decrease bureaucratic requirements on general practitioners.

Mr. Malone: In 1991 we set up a working group on unnecessary bureaucracy, made up of representatives of the general medical services committee, family health services authorities and the Department of Health. It recommended a number of improvements to claim forms and guidance on simplified procedures. These were implemented in June 1991.

All subsequent changes to the general practitioner contract have been made in consultation with representatives of the profession. Among other considerations, these consultations ensure that the profession's views on such changes are fully addressed and that bureaucracy is kept to a minimum.

Unemployment

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the cost to the national health service of unemployment (a) in total and (b) by such smaller categories as are available.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Dental Problems

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients consulted general practitioners about dental problems in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The information is not available centrally.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the privatisations which her Department has promoted since 1979, indicating, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Sackville: No part of the Department, its agencies or related bodies has been privatised since 1979.

Blood Supplies (North-West)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the average time taken to deliver blood supplies to hospitals throughout the north-west following the proposed closure of two blood transfusion centres.

Mr. Sackville: The National Blood Authority is satisfied that its proposal to establish a network of blood banks will enable it to continue to respond to emergency demand for blood without detriment to patient care and will result in an improved service to hospitals.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To [illegible] the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to replace the blood collected from the blood transfusion service at Lancaster for use throughout the north-west.

Mr. Sackville: The majority of blood donation does not take place at transfusion centres. Mobile collection teams go out into the community to conduct pre-arranged donation sessions. Under the NBA's proposals mobile teams would go out to donors in all areas whether the centres are amalgamated or not.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements she has made for the specialist provision of factor 8 to hospitals throughout the north-west of England following the proposed closure of two blood transfusion centres.

Mr. Sackville: The availability to hospitals of factor 8 will not be affected by the National Blood Authority's proposals.

Air Pollution

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the subjects of any reports currently being prepared by the committee on the medical effects of air pollutants, showing the time frames for (a) their completion and (b) their publication.

Mr. Sackville: Two sub-groups of the committee on the medical effects of air pollutants, on asthma and particles respectively, are expected to report back to the main committee by early 1995. The committee will consider their draft reports, with a view to agreeing publication as soon as possible thereafter.

In addition, a summary of COMEAP's work up to the end of 1994 is being prepared and will be published, jointly with material on the work of the advisory committee on the medical aspects of air pollution episodes. Publication is expected towards the end of this year.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each study undertaken for her Department this year on correlations between atmospheric pollution and the incidence of asthma and respiratory illnesses showing the time frames for (a) their completion and (b) their publication.

Mr. Malone: The relevant research studies funded in this year through the Department of Health's centrally commissioned programme are:

Middlesbrough Childhood Asthma study—University of Teesside 1 May 1994-30 April 1995.

Health Effects of the Nitrogen Dioxide Episode in London, December 1991–St. George's Hospital Medical School; 1 April 1993-28 February 1994.

Modified National Study of Health and Growth, which includes the prevalence of asthma in children-United Medical and Dental Schools (UMDS) of Guy's and St. Thomas's; 1 January 1993–31 December 1995 (part of a programme of work and not separately costed).

It is planned to commission two further studies this year which will begin in 1995.

Impact of Air Pollution and Temperature on General Practitioner Consultations—University College Medical School; 1 January 1995-31 December 1995.

Personal exposure to Air Pollutants and Severity of Hay Fever Symptoms in London Traffic Wardens-Imperial College of Science, Technology and Medicine; 1 February 1995–6 November 1995.

Reports arising from all these studies will be published in the normal way.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees of the London ambulance service were dismissed in 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: I am advised by the London ambulance service that it dismissed five people in 1993–94. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Martin Gorham, chief executive of the London ambulance service, for details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees of the London ambulance service were absent for (a) under 20 days, (b) 20 to 39 days and (c) over 40 days in 1993–94.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally in the form requested. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 20 October at column 308–9.

NHS Estates

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records are held by NHS Estates of transfers of land and property between health authorities, or health authorities and trusts in the Trent region.

Mr. Sackville: Transfers of property to trusts are agreed by the district health authority, and the legal transfers are effected by the regional authority on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The regional health authority and the trusts hold records of property transfers. NHS Estates may provide advice about policy matters, but is not involved in reaching agreement, and does not hold records of transfers. NHS Estates collects data on the size and value of the estate in the NHS.

Private Hospital Treatment

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many in-patients were treated in private hospitals for psychiatric specialties under contracts placed by (a) GP fundholders and (b) health authorities in the most recent year for which statistics are available;

(2) how many in-patients were treated in private hospitals for non-psychiatric specialties under contracts placed by (a) GP fundholders and (b) health authorities in the most recent year for which statistics are available;

(3) how may out-patients were treated in private hospitals for psychiatric specialties under contracts placed by (a) GP fundholders and (b) health authorities in the most recent year for which statistics are available;

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to reassess the case for permitting the prescribing of cannabis to those suffering from multiple sclerosis or glaucoma.

Mr. Sackville: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), met the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) and a delegation from the Alliance for Cannabis Therapeutics on 26 October to hear the case for making cannabis available for medical use. We intend to consider carefully the points made to us before coming to a view.

Any consideration of the use of cannabis as a medicinal product would have to take account of the potential risks associated with short and long-term use of cannabis.

Health Board Managers (Greenwich)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list (a) the names of the chairman, general manager or chief executive of the Greenwich health authority and its successor bodies and the Greenwich Healthcare Trust in each of the years since 1988–89 and (b) the amounts paid to each person by way of fees, salaries, other remuneration and expenses for each year;

(2) if she will list (a) the names of members serving on the Greenwich health authority, its successor bodies and the Greenwich Healthcare Trust in each of the financial years since 1988–89 and (b) the amounts paid to each member by way of fees, salaries, other remuneration and expenses for each year.

Mr. Malone: A list of chairmen, non-executive members and chief executives of Greenwich health authority, now Bexley and Greenwich health authority, since 1989 and Greenwich Healthcare Trust since 1992 will be placed in the Library.

The annual rates of remuneration are as follows:

	From April 1988	From April 1989	From April 1990	From January 1991	From December 1991

Since 17 September 1990, non-executives have been remunerated at a rate of £5,000 per annum.

Details of expenses paid to chairmen and non-executives and the salary of the chief executives are not available centrally.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of severance pay or other financial remuneration paid or agreed to be paid by the Greenwich Healthcare Trust to its former chief executive.

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for the Greenwich Healthcare Trust and the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman for details.

Tobacco

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her latest assessment on the influence that tobacco advertising has on the numbers of children and teenagers who become smokers.

Mr. Sackville: With regard specifically to this age group, the report "Why Children Start Smoking", Office of Population Consensus and Surveys 1990, identified a number of risk factors associated with starting to smoke. The report concluded that > "greater awareness of cigarette advertising is associated with a slightly increased likelihood of starting to smoke in the future. However, the effect appears to be small in comparison with some of the other influences on children such as the example set by parents and siblings."

The new voluntary agreement with the tobacco industry on advertising announced on 13 May contains measures further to restrict tobacco advertising in general and particular measures in relation to children and young people.

Staff Statistics

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 451, if she will provide comparable data on staff numbers on the revised basis for each year for which it is available since 1989.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral Parliamentary question.

Mr. Hague: I refer my hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993 at column 391.

Advertising Costs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total cost in advertising (a) personal pensions and SERPS, (b) disability living allowance and disability working allowance and (c) family credit in each year in which a campaign has been run.

Mr. Roger Evans: The total costs for advertising by the Department of Social Security were:

Personal pension and SERPS

1993–94	100,000

Disability living allowance and disability working allowance

1991–92	3,043,000
1992–93	240,000
1993–94	803,000

Family Credit	£
1989–90	5,518,000
1990–91	3,894,000
1991–92	1,500,000
1992–93	950,000
1993–94	3,090,000

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reimburse appellants against a negative diagnosis of PP12 D chronic bronchitis and emphysema who obtain at their own cost International Labour Organisation standard soft exposure X-rays which contribute to a positive diagnosis.

Mr. Hague: No. If the medical appeal tribunal considers that an X-ray is needed to decide an appeal it is obtained by the Benefits Agency at no cost to the appellant.

Carers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for removing the age limit on elderly carers after the age of 65 years; what are the reasons for the age limit; and if he will consider allowing carers after the age of 65 to claim invalidity care allowance.

Mr. Hague: Invalid care allowance is intended for people of working age who give up the opportunity of full-time employment because of their caring responsibilities.

We have no plans to allow carers over the age of 65 to claim ICA.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to adapt the benefits system for carers in line with the recommendations of the social services committee and the social security advisory committee.

Mr. Hague: We welcome the contributions made by the committees. However, we have no plans at present further to amend the system of support for carers.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make it his policy to provide more financial assistance to carers;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding the use of savings on his Budget to provide more financial assistance to carers.

Mr. Hague: The Government recognise the contribution made by carers to society and will continue to keep the financial provision made for them under review.

It is not usual practice to divulge the nature of any discussions which may have taken place with the Chancellor of the Exchequer prior to his Budget statement.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the reasons underlying the policy whereby a disabled person cannot claim the severe disability premium if the carer is receiving invalid care allowance.

Mr. Roger Evans: The severe disability premium is intended to give extra help to severely disabled people living independently, who are most likely to need to purchase care. Invalid care allowance is intended to provide a level of financial assistance to those people who have given up the opportunity of full-time employment because of their caring responsibilities. To pay both in respect of an individual's care needs would be to provide the same help twice.

TREASURY

Counterfeit Coins

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has concerning the circulation of counterfeit pound coins; what steps are being taken to deal with the problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: While there are some counterfeit £1 coins in circulation, the numbers are believed to be extremely small in relation to the total number of £1 coins in circulation.

Under the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981, it is a criminal offence to make a counterfeit of a coin or to pass it on to another person. Where sufficient evidence of such activities exists, it is for the police to take action against those responsible.

Share Prices

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the reasons why recently floated companies fail to maintain their flotation share price.

Mr. Nelson: None. Share prices are determined by market forces. The stock exchange investigates any unusual price movements as part of it's responsibility for market supervision.

Life Insurance

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax barriers there are to life insurance companies selling their products throughout Europe; and what measures he proposes to remove them.

Sir George Young: The EC third life insurance directive which came into force on 1 July brings about a single European market for life assurance. Our insurers have a range of good products and a history of achieving good returns from their policyholders and they are therefore well placed to compete for business throughout Europe.

Insurers are taxed in the United Kingdom on the investment income and gains accruing for the benefit of their policyholders. In general, policyholders resident here have no further tax to pay when their policy benefits are paid. This is because the tax the life office pays is treated as satisfying their liability to tax at the basic rate. The tax regimes in other European countries do not all follow this approach. There, the investment income and gains accruing for policyholders are more likely to accrue free of any tax charge. Tax may therefore be payable when policy benefits are paid.

Our tax system already recognises to an extent that this is the approach in many other countries. United Kingdom insurance companies are not taxed on the investment income and gains accruing for the benefits of non-resident policyholders if the business is conducted through an overseas branch.

We shall be introducing legislation in the forthcoming Finance Bill to extend this tax treatment to most life insurance business written directly from the United Kingdom with an individual who is resident in another European state, or which is business written with an employer in another European state for the benefit of employees outside the United Kingdom. Such business will in future be taxed in the same way as branch business with a non-resident. United Kingdom branches of overseas life insurance companies will also be able to benefit from this treatment for business with residents of another European state.

The changes will apply to new contracts written in the first accounting period of an insurer beginning after today.

We are also making some consequential changes to the existing rules dealing with the investment income and gains and tax credits attributable to overseas life assurance business. New compliance and information requirements will also be introduced to ensure that only genuine non-residents will be able to take out policies falling within the special rules for overseas life assurance.

Further details are contained in an Inland Revenue press release which is being issued today.

Taxes Management Act 1970

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions proceedings commenced under section 99 of the Taxes Management Act 1970 in each of the last five financial years resulted in a penalty being assessed.

Sir George Young [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The numbers of cases in which penalties have been formally charged under section 99 in each of the last five years are as follows:

	Number
1989–90	—
1990–91	—
1991–92	—
1992–93	1
1993–94	—

Welsh Rugby Union

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of the Inland Revenue's special investigations into Welsh Rugby Union; what tax has been recovered; what future arrangements have been made; and what similar inquiries have been made in England.

Sir George Young [holding answer 28 October 1994]: Rugby clubs are entitled to the same degree of confidentiality as any other taxpayers. It would not, therefore, be appropriate for me to comment any further.

PRIME MINISTER

Conduct of Public Life

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what recent meetings he has had with Lord Nolan; and what has been their purpose.

The Prime Minister: I met Lord Nolan on Wednesday 26 October to discuss various matters relating to the committee on standards in public life, including appointments of Members.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the proposed remuneration of the chairman and board members of the proposed committee on standards in public life.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 October 1994]: I shall publish this information shortly.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister for what reasons peers are not included in the categories of persons to be considered by the Committee on the conduct of public life in respect of their parliamentary duties.

The Prime Minister: It is open to the committee to examine the standards of conduct to be observed by peers as parliamentarians, as Ministers and, indeed, as holders of other public offices.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will include in the terms of reference of the body which will investigate standards of public life the issue of funding of political parties.

The Prime Minister: No. The funding of political parties has already been the subject of an investigation by the Home Affairs Select Committee. Under the terms of reference I announced on 25 October, it is open to Lord Nolan's committee to consider concerns that appointments or other Government decisions may be influenced by political contributions.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his oral statement on standards of conduct in public life of 25 October, Official Report, col. 757, if he will indicate (a) who was the informant mentioned by the Cabinet Secretary in his report, (b) what proposals for a deal were put to him by the intermediary and (c) when he was first contacted by the intermediary.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the statement that I made to the House on Public Life (Standards of Conduct) on 25 October 1994, Official Report, columns 757-770, and to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 25 October 1994, Official Report, columns 521-22.

Inhumane Weapons

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to ratify the 1980–81 United Nations convention on inhumane weapons.

The Prime Minister: We continue to work actively towards ratification of the United Nations weaponry convention review conference. Meanwhile, we do, of course, adhere strictly to the provisions of the convention.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that Ministers should give substantive answers to questions from hon. Members about the contents of books or reports in areas for which they have responsibility, which are published by sources other than the Minister's Department or a non-departmental public body operating in the area or public policy for which the Minister has responsibility.

The Prime Minister: It is for individual Ministers to decide how to answer parliamentary questions.

Mr. Al Fayed

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister on what date the note of his meeting with the informant acting on behalf of Mr. Al Fayed was passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

The Prime Minister: On 20 October 1994.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. Clapham), of 20 October, Official Report, column 420, what arrangements were proposed to him on behalf of Mr. Al Fayed; and if he will make a further statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the statement that I made to the House on Public Life (Standards of Conduct) on 25 October, Official Report 757–70.

Sanctions (Libya)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has had from the Arab league about Libyan sanctions.

The Prime Minister: I have received no such representations.

Al Fayed Brothers (Citizenship Application)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations have been made to him (a) by right hon. or hon. Members or (b) others concerning the applications for British citizenship by Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed and Mr. Ali Al Fayed.

The Prime Minister: So far as I am aware, none.

Ministerial Conduct

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to assure himself that the right hon. Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) has, in all respects, complied with the guidelines laid down in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1994]: Ministers have the responsibility to ensure that they comply with the guidelines in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". I have no reason to think that my right hon. Friend failed to do so.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister what declaration of continuing association with Messrs Hill Samuel was made by the right hon. Member for Norfolk, South and on what date.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1994]: Because of his former association with Messrs Hill Samuel, my right hon. Friend gave instructions to his Department that he should play no part in the selection process, in 1993, of financial advisers to the Department of Transport for the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister on what date the right hon. Member for Norfolk, South intimated (a) his desire to leave the Government and (b) his intention to rejoin Hill Samuel.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1994]: As was made clear in my right hon. Friend's resignation letter of 20 July, he had advised me earlier in the summer of his intention to leave the Government. I was informed of my right hon. Friend's decision to take up his appointment on 6 October.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister what intimation of potential conflict of interest was made by the right hon. Member for Norfolk, South when direction was given by his Department to the British Railways Board to establish a vendor unit; and on what date.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1994]: British Rail decided to establish a vendor unit in order to co-ordinate sales: no direction was given by the Department of Transport.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements were intimated by the right hon. Member for Norfolk, South under paragraphs 128 to 134 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers"; and if advice was sought by him from the then Prime Minister's Private Secretary in terms of paragraph 132.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1994]: My right hon. Friend's pension arrangements are a matter for him, but I am advised that they corresponded with the requirements of paragraphs 128-134 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", and no consultation with the then Prime Minister's Private Secretary was therefore necessary.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the contracts awarded by Her Majesty's Government to Messrs Hill Samuel between June 1979 and July 1994, with the value in each case.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1 January 1991 the Cabinet Secretary has advised individual Ministers of his opinion on their conduct in relation to "Questions of Procedure for Ministers"; which Ministers were involved; and on what dates the opinion was given.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 October 1994]: Discussions between Ministers and the Cabinet Secretary are private.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will give details of the current inquiry into the system of public appointments and identify (a) when it was established, (b) its terms of reference, (c) its composition and (d) when it will report;

(2) if he will give details of the current inquiry into the governance of quangos; when it was established; what are its terms of reference; what is its composition; and when it will report.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 October 1994]: As I told the House on 20 October, I set up a working group in May to review the guidance to Departments on public appointments procedures. The terms of reference for the review are:

> "To examine, in consultation with departments, the principles that should govern the membership of public bodies and the methods used to identify potential candidates, including questions relating to equal opportunities and multiple appointments, and the procedures leading to disqualification from or premature termination of appointments; and to consider whether amendments and additions need to be made to the 'Guide on Public Appointments procedures'."

The working group is chaired by the director of the public appointments unit and includes representatives from the Department of Employment, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Health, the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Scottish Office, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Treasury and the Welsh Office.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and I expect to receive the working group's report in a few weeks' time. I have also asked my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to look across the board at appointments to all public bodies and to make any further recommendations he thinks necessary. We shall be making any recommendations, together with the working group's report, available to the committee on standards in public life.

In addition, the Office of Public Service and Science and the Treasury are preparing, in consultation with Departments generally, a revision of "Non-Departmental Public Bodies: A Guide for Departments". This is intended to assist sponsor Departments on a range of matters concerning non-departmental public bodies. The guide was last revised in March 1992. Work on a further revision began in May, and the aim is to produce the revised guide when the parallel work on public appointments has been concluded. This, too, will be made available to the committee on standards in public life.

Economic and Finance Council

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to co-ordinate Government policy between the Treasury and the Home Office on the reduction of fines for law breaking in respect of persons, authorities or nations who refused to pay them, in relation to the decision made at the Council of Finance Ministers of the European Union on 21 October.

The Prime Minister: The decision taken at ECOFIN on 21 October was to increase the so-called "fine" imposed by the Commission on Italy and Spain by 1.1 becu, and not to reduce the penalties.

Although disallowance decisions taken by the Commission under the common agricultural policy are often colloquially described as fines, they are in fact completely different from fines imposed by criminal courts. I believe that co-ordination between the Treasury and the Home Office on these areas of policy is satisfactory.

Cabinet Secretary's Investigation

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 20 October, Official Report, columns 420–22, in regard to the inquiry by the Cabinet Secretary, how many other cases there are of hon. Members who are now Ministers in respect of whom any inquiries are being or have been undertaken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answers of 20 October, Official Report, columns 420–22, (1) which other hon. Members are being questioned by the Permanent Secretary to the Cabinet;

(2) if he will (a) make a statement on the Cabinet Secretary's report when it is complete and (b) publish (i) its contents, including the nature of the complaints and where they originated, (ii) the evidence requested, (iii) details of interviews conducted, (iv) a full summary of points considered and (v) the conclusions drawn.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1994]: I refer the right hon. and hon. Members to the statement that I made to the House on Public Life (Standards of Conduct) on 25 October 1994, Official Report, columns 757–770, and to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 25 October 1994, Official Report, columns 521–22.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) of 25 October, Official Report, column 521-22, if he will identify the informant acting on behalf of Mohamed Al Fayed and all Ministers against whom allegations were made; and what documentary evidence has been requested and examined by the Cabinet Secretary as part of his investigation.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The answer to the first part of the question is no. On the identity of the Ministers against whom allegations were made, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave today to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr Morris). On the third part of the question, I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn), on 25 October 1994 Official Report, columns 521-22.

Butler Inquiry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. Clapham) of 20 October, Official Report, columns 420-21, how many Ministers are being or have been investigated by Sir Robin Butler; when he expects to receive the report; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 October 1994]: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury have confirmed that they were the subject of allegations investigated at my request by the Cabinet Secretary. No other Ministers were involved.

Mr. Ian Greer

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister on what dates on and after 29 September he has met Mr. Ian Greer of Ian Greer Associates.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 October 1994]: None.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what is the total number of public appointments which he is responsible for making or which require his approval; and if he will include figures for the Crown appointments on which he is responsible for advising Her Majesty the Queen;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 17 January, Official Report, columns 367-68, if he will give details of the Crown appointments on which he is responsible for advising Her Majesty the Queen.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 October 1994]: Further to the information on appointments already given to the hon. Member, I am listing those appointments on which at the present time I advise Her Majesty the Queen.

The total number of appointments for which I am responsible, including those on which I advise Her Majesty the Queen, cannot be accurately calculated since I have discretion in some cases as to how many appointments I make; and in the case of Church appointments some vacancies fall casually and unpredictably to the Crown by virtue of the Royal Prerogative.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Sri Lanka.

Mr. Baldry: I am planning to visit Sri Lanka from 15 to 16 November.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding problems there are for the ECOMOG forces in Liberia; and how the United Nations intends to deal with this.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no information on the funding position of those states which have contributed troops to the ECOMOG peacekeeping effort. The UN trust fund for Liberia was set up in 1993, partly to help support troops of participating ECOMOG countries. So far, only three countries, including the United Kingdom, have contributed to the fund.

Middle East

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the result of the study tour organised by Her Majesty's Government of middle east countries related to British expertise in waste water, referred to in his letter of 16 September; and what proposals he has to help Libya, Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As presaged in my letter of 16 September, a group of middle eastern water specialists visited the United Kingdom from 17 to 21 October to take part in a study tour of British waste water facilities. They visited a wide range of facilities in this country.

The tour was arranged as a United Kingdom contribution to the work of the multilateral water working group, one of the five groups on the multilateral track of the peace process.

Libya, Iran and Iraq are not members of the multilateral water working group. None of their Governments have sought our help.

India

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Kashmir, Sind, Karachi and the Punjab.

Mr. Baldry: Clashes continue in Kashmir between militant groups and the Indian security forces. The law and order situation in Sind, and particularly in Karachi, remains unsettled. We are encouraged by the growing return to stability in Punjab.

Pakistan

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the latest situation regarding the question of the violation of human rights in Pakistan.

(2) what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Pakistan concerning the violation of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We regularly raise our concerns about human rights with the Pakistani Government.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total cost of all assistance provided to the Falkland Islands in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the House on 20 April 1993 by my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Sir M. Lennox-Boyd), which listed such expenditure from 1983. The following figures bring that reply up to date:

Gross public expenditure on aid to the Falklands

(£000s)

1992–93	58
1993–94	12 (provisional)

Additional assistance was provided by the diplomatic wing as follows:

Assistant under-secretary's programme budget

(£000s)

1992–93	5
1993–94	7

FCO scholarship awards scheme

(£000s)

1993–94	14

I have nothing to add to the statement made on 20 April 1993 about costs relating to the defence of the islands.

Iraq

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for trade with Iraq have been (a) put to the United Nations sanctions committee for consideration by the Government, (b) which companies tendered these applications, (c) how many applications have been granted and (d) which companies succeeded in the applications.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the interests of commercial confidentiality, we do not disclose details about export licences that have been issued. Given constant changes in procedures for submitting applications to the Iraq sanctions committee throughout the lifetime of the regime, the other information requested could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy of the statement by the Russian foreign Minister concerning the lifting of sanctions against Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Despite the efforts of the Russian Foreign Minister, Iraq has still not recognised the sovereignty of Kuwait or the Iraq-Kuwait border as demarcated by the United Nations.

There can be no question of lifting sanctions until Iraq complies with all relevant Security Council resolutions.

Gough Island

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to establish Gough island in the Tristan da Cunha group as a world heritage site.

Mr. Goodlad: We have applied for Gough island's nomination for inclusion in the list of world heritage sites under the world heritage convention. An application was lodged with the world heritage committee of UNESCO in Paris on 12 October 1994.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet Libyan officials in Cairo about Lockerbie.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no such plans.

Nigeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there have recently been sales of British tanks to Nigeria.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. Details about the export of tanks can be found in the UK return to the UN register of conventional arms, a copy of which has been placed in the Libraries of the House. However, in December 1993 we and our European Union partners announced a series of measures against the Nigerian military Government, including restrictions on new export licence applications for defence equipment. Since that time, no new export licences have been granted for the supply of lethal equipment to the Nigerian armed forces.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

CERN

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to decide on the United Kingdom's future contribution to CERN; what estimates he has made as to how much it will be; what will be the cost for the other countries involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The United Kingdom's contribution to CERN is fixed by an agreed formula based on member states' GNP. The United Kingdom contribution for the 1994 is about £60·5 million. The contributions of all member states for 1994 are shown in the following table. The budgetary process for 1995 is underway and in the current CERN draft budget the United Kingdom's contribution is estimated to be of the order of £64 million.

Membership of CERN remains a high priority for the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council, which pays the United Kingdom's contribution. The full programme of work at CERN complements domestic particle physics research in the United Kingdom.

Research Councils (Redundancies)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the current expenditure for each of the research councils on past redundancies.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: In the financial year 1993–94 the research councils then in existence incurred the following costs associated with redundancies (including early retirements and restructuring):

	£ million
Agricultural and Food Research Council	5·76
Economic and Social Research Council	0·02
Medical Research Council	4·00
Natural Environment Research Council	2·60
Science and Engineering Research Council	2·30
Total	£14·68

These figures include both payments in respect of departures in 1993–94 and ongoing payments in respect of earlier departures.

On 1 April 1994 the research council system was reorganised. The Agricultural and Food Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council ceased to exist and three new research councils came into being—the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council and the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council. The total expenditure by the research councils in 1994–95 on redundancies, as defined herein is currently estimated at around £16 million.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a breakdown of people currently holding public appointments in terms of (a) age, (b) sex, (c) race and (d) the region in which they live.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: At 1 September, 28 per cent. of appointments to public bodies were held by women. Further details are available in "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Statistics about the number of public appointments held by women at 1 September 1994 are still being collected, and will be published at the end of the year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list each public opinion survey commissioned by (a) his Department and (b) his agencies since 1 October 1992, showing for each the subject, objectives, total costs, the period in which it was conducted and the organisation from which it was commissioned.

Sir John Wheeler: The information has been placed in the Library.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Sir John Wheeler: No record is kept of such estimates.

Prosecution Costs

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the arrest, prosecution and appeal for Neil Latimer, Noel Bell, Jim Hegen and Winston Allen since 1983; and how much money it has cost the state to pursue this matter.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Post

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department has spent on postage, and how many items have been posted by his Department, in each of the last five years.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The amount spent on postage by the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments in the last five years is:

1989–90	4,231,360
1990–91	4,884,984
1991–92	6,059,985
1992–93	6,387,424
1993–94	6,889,320

The Northern Ireland Office can provide information only for 1993–94. Computerised records are not held for the previous years and many of the manual records have been fire damaged.

No statistics are available on the number of items posted.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Sir John Wheeler: The Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies 1993", copies of which are available in the Library, gives a figure of 30 per cent. of public appointments in Northern Ireland being held by women. The 1994 figures are still being collected and will be announced in due course.

Irish Language

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new proposals he has to promote and support the Irish language.

Sir John Wheeler: A draft order will shortly be laid before Parliament which will include a power to enable district councils to erect street names in a second language other than English. In practice, the second language is most likely to be Irish.

Classical Swine Fever

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of classical swine fever occurred in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: There have been no cases of classical swine fever recorded in Northern Ireland since 1985.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Members' Interests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will recommend the addition of a new requirement from hon. Members to register the amounts paid to them from all sources for parliamentary work in the Register of Members' Interests.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for the Select Committee on Members' Interests. The hon. Member can, if he wishes, make a formal proposal to the Committee.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Charging Practice

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Attorney-General what steps have been taken this year to improve charging practice.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service and the police have together set up a charging standards group to develop joint guidance to assist police officers when instituting criminal proceedings to select the most appropriate charge.

Prosecution of Summary Offences

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to review the costs of, and time taken for, preparation of prosecution cases for summary offences.

The Attorney-General: The police and Crown Prosecution Service are participating in a pilot study in six police forces on the production of abbreviated files.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General what proposals he has for allowing barristers employed by the Crown Prosecution Service to have rights of audience to act for it.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service is pursuing its application to the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee for rights of audience in the higher courts. The decision is a matter for the Lord Chancellor and the designated judges.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General on what dates and to what extent representations were made to the Irish Attorney-General about the delay in responding to the RUC's warrant for the extradition of Brendan Smyth; what reasons were offered; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I understand that the Minister for Justice answered a question on this case in the Dail on 25 October 1994.

Officials of my Department regularly communicate with the Irish Attorney-General's Office about cases where a request for extradition to the United Kingdom has been made. This case figured in such contacts before it became apparent, in November 1993, that there was a prospect of Brendan Smyth coming voluntarily to Northern Ireland to face trial.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General how long it took to effect the extradition of Brendan Smyth from the Irish Republic following the consideration of the RUC's request in the appropriate Irish court.

The Attorney-General: On 29 April 1993, the RUC delivered to the Garda warrants for the arrest of Brendan Smyth and a request for his extradition. Extradition proceedings were not instituted in the Irish courts before he came to Northern Ireland of his own volition, appearing in court there on 21 January 1994.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General how long the Attorney-General of the Irish Republic took to initiate the appropriate judicial and courts process in response to the RUC's extradition warrant for Brendan Smyth.

The Attorney-General: The hon. Member is referred to my previous answers.

EDUCATION

Cornish Language

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to increase resources that are available to promote the teaching of the Cornish language.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend does not make resources available specifically for this purpose. Schools are, of course, free to provide teaching in the Cornish language from within their general resources, if there is demand.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many copies of the videotape promoting opt-out schools have been made; and at what cost;

(2) what were the production costs of the videotape promoting opt-out schools;

(3) how many copies of the videotape promoting opt-out schools have been distributed; to whom; and at what cost.

Mr. Robin Squire: The videotape, "Our Children, Our Choice", provides factual information on grant-maintained status through the experience of four schools. The production costs were some £48,000, and 10,000 copies have been made at a further cost of £16,000. Between June and September this year about 3,500 copies were distributed, including 500 which were sent to grant-maintained headteachers and governors. The remainder are being made available at the Department's "Going GM" conferences or in response to requests from schools and the public. The videotape frequently forms part of a larger order for publications about grant-maintained status and it is therefore not possible to identify specific distribution costs.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications have so far been considered by her Department from schools seeking grant-maintained status; how many such applications are currently under consideration; and what is the normal length of time taken for the processing of such applications.

Mr. Robin Squire: A total of 1,125 schools have so far applied for grant-maintained status. Of these applications, 28 are currently being considered by the Department.

Applications are processed, on average, within about two months of the end of the statutory period for submission of objections. That average time would be shorter but for the minority of difficult cases requiring prolonged consideration, for example where the local education authority has published conflicting proposals affecting the school.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which Department or office provides the inspectors who visit schools at her behest when considering applications for grant-maintained status; how long on average it takes inspectors to provide a report on their visit; how many such reports in total are currently awaited by her Department; and what steps she is taking to ensure the speedy and efficient delivery of such reports in the future.

Mr. Robin Squire: Schools applying for grant-maintained status are visited by inspectors from the Office for Standards in Education. No record is kept of the average time it takes for inspectors to provide a report of their visit but reports are normally provided speedily. Where the period following the publication of proposals includes school holidays during which the school cannot be visited, the process inevitably takes longer. Eleven reports on applications for grant-maintained status are currently awaited by the Department. Both Ofsted and the Department keep their procedures under continuous review to ensure that they are as efficient as possible.

Chinese Students

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 416, if she will make it her policy to increase the funding available to Chinese students.

Mr. Boswell: The answer that I gave on 24 October should have said that Chinese students will receive a total of £3·174 million funding in financial year 1994–95 under the overseas research students awards scheme funded through the Higher Education Funding Council for England, as well as £1·136 million funding from FCO, ODA and British Council scholarship schemes for overseas students during the same period. However, it is not possible to identify how much of this funding will benefit students who wish to study English with the aim of becoming translators. The ORSAS awards are available on a competitive basis to students of outstanding merit and no account is taken of nationality. We do not intend to increase the amount of funding to students from any particular nation. Decisions on any increases in other schemes would be taken by FCO, ODA and the British Council.

Teachers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what recent representations she has received from teaching unions about the difficulties faced by their members when subjected to unsubstantiated allegations of physical or sexual abuse of pupils; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what steps are taken by her Department to protect teachers against the effect of false allegations of physical and sexual abuse upon pupils;

(3) how many complaints were made in the latest year for which figures are available alleging physical or sexual abuse of pupils by teachers; how many of those complaints are expected to lead to criminal charges being laid; and what plans she has to review guidelines in this area;

(4) what compensation is made available to teachers who are unable to continue their careers following unsubstantiated, false and malicious allegations of physical or sexual abuse by pupils; and what plans she has to review policy in this area.

Mr. Forth: My officials and I have held a number of meetings in the last 12 months with representatives of the National Union of Teachers, the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers, the Association of Teachers and Lecturers, the Professional Association of Teachers, the National Association of Head Teachers and the Secondary Heads Association to discuss allegations of abuse against their members. The Department is now considering what new guidance might be issued about child protection and allegations of abuse. No comprehensive figures are available of the number of allegations of physical or sexual abuse made against teachers, or of how many of these lead to criminal charges. A recent survey relating to misconduct more generally suggested that while only 7 per cent. of allegations in 1992–93 had led to conviction for a criminal offence, a further 40 per cent. had been found substantiated and resulted in disciplinary action. Compensation where allegations are shown to be unfounded is in the first place a matter for employers.

Grant for education support and training Programme

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for 1992–93 and 1993–94, the amount spent in each London borough, with a total for each training and enterprise council area, under the part of the grant for education support and training programme now incorporated into the single regeneration budget, and the amount allocated to be spent in 1994–95 on the same basis.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave to the hon. Member on Thursday 27 October 1994, Official Report, column 813.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mine Clearance Operations

41. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training the Government provide to personnel involved in mine clearance operations in the removal of anti-personnel mines with self-neutralising or self-destruct mechanisms which have failed to self-neutralise or self-destruct; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We fund a number of UN-sponsored operations, and operations of specialised non-governmental organisations which provide training applicable to the individual mines identified in their areas of operation.

Rwanda

42. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support is being given to help non-government work in Rwanda.

Mr. Baldry: Since 6 April, we have specifically provided £15.5 million to non-governmental organisations implementing emergency relief programmes to displaced and refugee Rwandans.

Somaliland

43. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the provision of development aid and assistance to the Republic of Somaliland by British and by international organisations including the European Union.

Mr. Baldry: Since May 1991 we have provided £5·3 million of humanitarian assistance to north-west Somalia. ODA established an NGO liaison and support office in Hargeisa in April.

India

44. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet members or representatives of the Indian Government to discuss overseas aid.

Mr. Baldry: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development plans to visit India from 4 to 8 December to see a number of our aid projects and discuss the aid programme with state and Government Ministers.

Baltic States

46. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to extend the scope of the know-how funds in the Baltic states.

Mr. Baldry: The know-how fund in the Baltic states continues to provide rapid and flexible help for the reform process. It is very much welcomed by the countries concerned.

Malaysia

47. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Malaysia to discuss aid with Ministers of the Malaysian Government.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what current overseas development assistance is given to Sierra Leonne by Britain and the European Union; and if he will list the projects assisted by purpose, value and implementing body.

Mr. Baldry: In the current financial year, British aid is expected to amount to around £1.5 million on technical assistance, plus £0.35 million on humanitarian aid. Further details are set out in the table.

European Community assistance in 1993 was 20.4 mecu. This comprised: national indicative programme 11.9 mecu; structural adjustment support 2.3 mecu; STABEX—agricultural commodity income support programme—3.4 mecu; other 2.8 mecu.

Further details may be found in the 1993 annual report on co-operation between the European Union and the Republic of Sierra Leone, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Palestine

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made with the Palestinian national authority in establishing satisfactory forms of financial accountability that allow the efficient and effective disbursement of aid.

Mr. Baldry: Agreement has been reached with the Palestinian authority on a mechanism for the proper and efficient disbursement of the £3 million which we are providing towards Palestinian police salaries. The United Nations works and relief agency, which has long experience of paying salaries under conditions that are subject to audit, is being used as paying agent.

In addition, United Kingdom consultants working with the Palestinian authorities monitor payments and check that the correct amounts are paid to the police officers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give a progress report on the use of British aid to help the Palestinians on the West Bank and in Gaza.

Mr. Baldry: We have pledged £75 million in aid for the Palestinians and in support of the peace process, for the three years 1994–95 to 1996–97. Most of this will be channelled through the programmes of the European Community. The EC has fully committed its programme for this year. Some of our aid will go through the United Nations relief and works agency, to which we have provided £6 million this year.

Our bilateral programme has spent £3.5 million so far this financial year. The projects include support for the police, the water sector and health care.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the international donors' meeting in Paris between 6 and 9 September at which the disbursement of aid to the Palestinian national authority was discussed.

Mr. Baldry: The international donors' meeting in Paris between 6 and 9 September was postponed due to bilateral political issues. No new date for such a meeting has been set.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the current humanitarian needs in Sudan.

Mr. Baldry: Harvest prospects are good in most parts of the country, although localised areas of need will remain. United Nations agencies are currently completing an assessment of humanitarian needs for 1995. The conclusions are expected to be made available shortly.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which parts of Sudan are currently inaccessible to international humanitarian relief organisations.

Mr. Baldry: Operation Lifeline Sudan was refused access in September to four of the 77 destinations designated as relief distribution centres: Boma, Kongor, Nimule and Pariang. These are all located in areas of military activity. Access to the Nuba Mountains is as described in my answer of 25 October 1994, Official Report, column 546.

Yemen

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had in relation to the suspension of Britain's overseas aid to the Yemen.

Mr. Baldry: The outbreak of civil war made it impossible to continue with our aid projects. The decision to suspend our bilateral programme was taken at ministerial level. Aid funds were channelled instead to the International Committee of the Red Cross to provide humanitarian relief.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent action his Department has taken to protect rain forests.

Mr. Baldry: Our policy is to help and encourage countries with rain forests to manage them sustainably. The Overseas Development Administration has around 200 forestry projects in progress or under consideration, at an expected cost to the aid programme of about £157 million. In July we hosted with the Government of India an international workshop in New Delhi which successfully agreed a standard format for countries to use to report to the United Nations commission on sustainable development on progress in implementing the forest principles agreed at the 1992 earth summit.

Know-How Funds

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the know-how fund projects that have been used for the production or promotion of (a) alcoholic drinks and (b) tobacco products.

Mr. Baldry: No know-how fund projects have addressed directly the production or promotion of alcoholic drinks. Privatisation programmes in Hungary and Romania have included advice on the privatisation of breweries and one project in Bulgaria will advise the management of a brewery on an employee buy-out. A visit by a Georgian trade team to Britain, to help develop their export potential, included a component on the management and marketing of wine. Nine managers who have undertaken attachments to United Kingdom companies under a scheme to increase management experience have come from or been attached to companies with some interest in alcoholic drinks. This scheme has, since 1990, brought more than 650 managers to the United Kingdom. Two pre-investment feasibility studies have concerned firms involved in the alcoholic beverages sector.

On tobacco products, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend, the Member for Morecombe and Lunesdale (Sir M. Lennox-Boyd) on 25 March 1993, Official Report, column 654. No managerial attachments involving the tobacco sector have taken place since then, nor has any other support to tobacco sector projects been provided from the know-how fund.

Aid

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria are used to determine whether United Kingdom funding of aid projects will promote the economic development of the recipient country.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answers that I gave to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 26 October 1994 at column 713.

EMPLOYMENT

Whitland and Longridge Creameries

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has imposed a request for a 90-day consultation period with the relevant trade unions at the Whitland and Longridge creameries following the announcement of 156 and 102 staff redundancies at the two creameries on 21 October.

Mr. Oppenheim: Statutory arrangements concerning redundancy consultation are set out in part IV, chapter II of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992. These arrangements provide for application to an industrial tribunal by a recognised trade union where it is alleged that the employer has not complied with the requirements.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the types of special reasons approved by his Department under the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 which set aside the requirement for 90 days' consultation with the relevant trade union when more than 100 staff were made redundant.

Mr. Oppenheim: It is for an industrial tribunal to determine whether there are "special circumstances" justifying an employer's failure fully to comply with the duty to consult trade union representatives about proposed redundancies.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what date he was informed by Dairy Crest that it intended to make 156 staff redundant at its Whitland creamery in Dyfed and 102 staff redundant at its Longridge creamery in Lancashire.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information contained in statutory redundancy notifications is supplied in confidence.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints were made in each of the past two years against members of the British forces serving in Cyprus.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and nature of complaints made in each of the past two years against members of the British forces in Cyprus; and how many recorded cases there have been of assualt, criminal damage, rape, attempted rape, grievous bodily harm and actual bodily harm.

Mr. Soames: Information about the number and nature of complaints against members of the British forces in Cyprus is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, central records are held of courts martial and of cases heard by a civilian court or the sovereign base area court where, if found guilty, service personnel may receive a penal sentence. Details of cases in the categories requested which have been heard in the last years are as follows:

[2] One of the corporals found not guilty.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 17 October, Official Report, column 40, what action he has taken to examine allegations about Gulf war syndrome sickness.

Mr. Soames: A medical assessment programme has been established for all former Gulf personnel who have come forward with concerns about their health. As part of the assessment they are given a very detailed medical examination consisting of tests and investigations tailored to the patient's medical and occupational history, their reported symptoms and clinical signs. In addition to clinical information gained through these assessments, we are kept informed of relevant developments by former Gulf allies, including the findings of the ongoing American medical assessment programme for United States Gulf veterans.

Information from the medical assessment programme and from other recognised scientific sources is reviewed by medical and scientific experts in my Department covering a range of specialities, including general medicine, occupational medicine, public health medicine, pathology and psychiatry. These investigations have produced no evidence of any medical condition peculiar to service in the Gulf.

Arms Sales (Indonesia)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to sell Scorpion tanks and further Hawk aircraft to Indonesia.

Mr. Freeman: A commercial contract was concluded by industry last year for a further 24 Hawk aircraft to Indonesia. No further Hawk contract has been signed. I also understand that no contract for Scorpion vehicles has yet been signed by Industry. Details of negotiations are commercially confidential between the customer and supplier, but the export of military goods from the United Kingdom has been and will continue to be subject to export control which takes into account defence and foreign policy considerations.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Soames: My Department makes no record of this information.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr Soames: I refer the hon. Member to "Public Bodies 1993", which shows the number of women serving on MOD non-departmental public bodies. The 1994 figures are still being collated and will be announced in due course.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Residence Permits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average processing time of his Department is in respect of applications for (a) residence permits for migrant citizens of the European Union and (b) residence documents of their third country national family members, as at October 1994; and what it was in October 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information available on processing times for deciding applications for residence documents during October 1993 and September 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, is as follows:

	Residence permits	Residence documents
October 1993	67 per cent. within one month	48 per cent. within one month
	85 per cent. within two months	74 per cent. within two months
	98 per cent. within six months	96 per cent. within six months
September 1994	57 per cent. within one month	38 per cent. within one month
	77 per cent. within two months	57 per cent. within two months
	98 per cent. within six months	86 per cent. within six months

In consequence of the European Economic Area agreement the figures for September 1994 include applications relating to nationals of Austria, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden as well as European Union nationals.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the longest period during which an application for (a) residence permits for a migrant citizen of the European Union and (b) a residence document for the third country national family member of such a person has been outstanding as at October 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 1 October 1994, the longest period for which a residence permit application had been outstanding was 10 months and the longest period for a residence document application 46 months.

Cyprus

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made since July in respect of returning to British jurisdiction fugitives from justice resident in Turkish-occupied Cyprus.

Mr. Maclean: The situation which existed in July remains unchanged. We have an extradition arrangement with the Government of the Republic of Cyprus, whose writ does not run in the north of the island. We do not recognise northern Cyprus as a separate state. We have made it clear to the Turkish Cypriot "authorities" that we shall continue to press for the return of fugitives resident there.

Doncaster Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the incidents, giving in each case the date, type of incident with brief details, and the outcome, at Doncaster prison since 20 June to the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 31 October 1994:

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Ali Al Fayed applied for British citizenship; (1) when he was interviewed by a police officer; when a decision was taken on his application; who took the final decision; what was the final decision; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed applied for British citizenship; when he was interviewed by a police officer; when a decision was taken on his application; who took the final decision; what was the final decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Mr. Ali Al Fayed submitted his application on 29 January 1993 and Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed on 15 February 1994. I do not propose to comment further on the detailed processing of their applications.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what formal or informal representations have been made to him or his ministerial colleagues, or any of his or their predecessors by hon. Members in respect of the applications for citizenship of Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed or Mr. Ali Al Fayed.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We have received representations from two right hon. or hon. Members about these applications. It is not our practice to disclose details about private communications.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the main requirements for a person to satisfy currently before British citizenship is granted; what is the average waiting times between an application being accepted, interview by a detective police officer and a decision being taken to grant or refuse an application; and how many applications are currently awaiting decision.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The requirements for naturalisation as a British citizen are set out in schedule 1 to the British Nationality Act 1981. For those applying on the basis of their residence in the United Kingdom they are that they were in the United Kingdom at the beginning of the period of five years ending with the date of the application; that they have not been absent for more than 450 days in this five year period, and for no more than 90 days in the last 12 months; that they have not been in breach of the immigration laws during the five years and have been free of any restriction under those laws on the period they might remain in the United Kingdom for 12 months; that they are of good character; that they have a sufficient knowledge of the English, Welsh or Scottish Gaelic language; and that they intend to make their principal home in the United Kingdom. For those applying on the basis of their marriage to a British citizen the qualifying period is three years with no more than 270 days absences in that period, and no more than 90 days in the final 12 months. Such applicants are required not to have been in breach of the immigration laws during the three-year period and to be free of any restriction under those laws on the period they might remain in the United Kingdom; and to be of good character.

At the end of September 1994, the average waiting time for a certificate of naturalisation was 13.6 months. Not all applicants are interviewed by a police officer so it is not possible to give average interval times in the form requested.

As of 21 October 1994, there were 42,119 applications for British citizenship outstanding of which 33,424 were applications for naturalisation.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances applications for British citizenship are referred to him or Ministers for final decision; and how many such applications have been referred to Ministers in each of the last five years and in the current year to date.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Applications are referred to Ministers where they are especially difficult or sensitive. The number of cases referred to Ministers is not separately recorded and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a person whose application for British citizenship is refused has a right to receive a full explanation of such refusal; if such a person has a right of appeal against refusal; and if application fees are refunded when applications are refused.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Section 44(2) of the British Nationality Act 1981 provides that the Secretary of State shall not be required to assign any reason for the grant or refusal of any application under the Act the decision on which is at his discretion; and that his decision on any such application shall not be subject to appeal to, or review in, any court.

A small proportion of the fee is refunded when an application is refused.

Iraqi Business Men

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Iraqi business men have entered the United Kingdom since October 1992.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not available, as business men—persons seeking to establish themselves in the United Kingdom in business or self-employment—are not identified separately in the statistics. Five hundred and fifty Iraqi nationals were given leave to enter as business visitors—persons seeking to transact business during their visit—in the period October 1992 to June 1994.

Sri Lankan Tamils

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankan Tamils are at present being held in (a) prison and (b) detention centres for alleged immigration offences.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: On 26 October 1994, two Sri Lankan nationals were being held in prison and 13 in detention centres, having been detained on arrival under Immigration Act powers.

Firearms

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the efficiency savings that will result from operating the best practice guidelines issued to police forces in 1991 for administering the firearms licensing system.

Mr. Maclean: The administration of firearms licensing is a matter for individual chief officers of police. The efficiency savings achieved by an individual police force will depend on how closely their existing firearms licensing system follows best practice.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the progress made by police forces in adopting the best practice guidelines issued in 1991 for administering the firearms licensing system.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr Griffiths) on 27 October 1994, Official Report, column 770.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No record is kept of such matters.

Mr. Barron : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has undertaken of the various costs of administering the firearms licensing system as calculated by (a) Ernst and Young and (b) the Association of Chief Police Officers multiforce study in setting the levels of fees for firearms certificates.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 20 July at column 282.

The Association of Chief Officers' study was very helpful, but we could not rely on its figures as a basis for reviewing the fees as they did not take account of overheads and other important factors.

The right course was to base our review on a costing exercise which took full account of the best practise procedures which we have recommended to police forces. That is what we have done.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide information on the original residence or ethnic origin of asylum seekers in official statistics.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There are no plans to compile statistics on the original residence or ethnic origin of asylum seekers.

Asylum

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 1,000 ex-Yugoslav detainees whom the Government said, in November 1992, it would accept into Britain have been accepted; and how many of them are already here.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 13 October 1994, 969 particularly vulnerable individuals and 1,293 dependants have been authorised for acceptance under the arrangements announced in November 1992 and June 1993, where the Government offered to receive 1,000 particularly vulnerable individuals from the former Yugoslavia and their immediate dependants, an estimated total of 4,000 people in all.

As at 24 October 1994, 803 particularly vulnerable individuals and 1,104 dependants have arrived under these arrangements. Prior to this, 68 sick and wounded ex-detainees from Bosnia arrived in September 1992.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide information on the length of time applicants have been waiting for an initial decision on their asylum applications.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Statistics giving the year of decision by year of application is published in table 5.1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin: "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1993", issue number 17/94 published on 14 July 1994, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Information on the estimated average length of time between receipt of an application and a decision in a given period is available and is provided on request.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications he has received for asylum from Kenyan citizens in each of the past 10 years and in this year to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: In the period 1 January 1994 to 30 September 1994, 930 applications for asylum have been received from Kenyan nationals. Information for the years 1985 to 1993 is given in table 2.1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin: "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1993", issue 14/94 published on 14 July 1994, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Prison Security

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy as to the placing of security cameras in the visiting areas of prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 31 October 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about security cameras in visiting areas of prisons.

The use of closed circuit television cameras in visits areas in prison can be a valuable security aid. The policy is for governors to install such equipment where they judge that the benefits in terms of improved security and control will justify the investment.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep and Cattle

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the Government's long-term policies regarding (a) sheep quotas and (b) suckler cow premiums.

Mr. Jack: In the long term the Government would like to see agricultural production regulated by price and not by quotas and similar devices, which impose a bureaucratic burden on farmers and prevent or inhibit the rational development of production in response to relative efficiency. In line with this policy the Government have, as a first step, called for the sheep and suckler cow quotas to be replaced by regional reference quantities, with the rate of premium being scaled down proportionately to any excess above the reference levels. Any such change would, of course, require farmers to be given an adequate period of notice before it was introduced.

Fishing

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actual or previous sums of money have been allocated to the British fishing industry under the PESCA initiative; what proportion of the total EU allocation is allocated to each of the receiving nations, approximately in each European nation; how much will be allocated per person employed in the fishing industry; and what are the funds to be made available in total and per person for Devon.

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list in pounds sterling the allocations from PESCA for the United Kingdom and the other eligible member states and the proposed allocations to the regions in the United Kingdom which are highly dependent on fishing;

(2) what is the basis for proposed allocations of PESCA funding for (a) member states and (b) regions which are highly dependent on fishing.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to the reply on 26 October column 620]: The reply should have read:

The commission has allocated PESCA funding between member states as follows

The commission has allocated PESCA funding between member states as follows

	£ million[1]
Belgium	1·52
Denmark	12·30
Germany	17·44
Greece	20·55
Spain	31·46
France	21·15
Ireland	2·80
Italy	25·55
Netherlands	7·73
Portugal	19·41
United Kingdom	25·70

[1] Converted at £1 = 1·319 ecu

This breakdown is based on employment in the fisheries sector as a whole, and on the fleet reductions required by member states' multi-annual guidance programmes.

My right hon. Friends have yet to take a final decision on the allocation of the United Kingdom's share of this and other Community initiatives between England, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales. The allocations which have been notified to interested organisations in England are currently only provisional.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy concerning the application of BSE safety regulations to animals born since 1 January 1991.

Mrs. Browning: The measures currently in force in Great Britain apply to all cattle irrespective of their date of birth. No change in this position is envisaged, but the European Commission is considering whether younger cattle should be excluded from the European Union rules for trade in bone-in beef from the United Kingdom and we are pressing for urgent action on this.

Copenhagen Agricultural Economics Institute

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the report produced for the European Commission by the Copenhagen Agricultural Economics Institute.

Mr. Jack: I am not aware of any report produced for the European Commission by the Copenhagen Agricultural Economics Institute. However the hon. Member may be referring to the report of a study by a team of experts on behalf of the European Commission's DG II (Economy and Finance) and entitled "EC Agriculture Policy for the 21st Century". This report has yet to be published; when it is, copies will be placed in the Library.

Milk Quota

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the allocation of responsibility for processing milk quota transactions to the Intervention board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 October 1994]: The problems faced by the Intervention board in processing milk quota transfer and leasing transactions have been overcome. In a press statement on 27 October, the board's chief executive explained that excellent progress had been made in recent weeks and that within a few days of vesting day—1 November—the board will have processed all acceptable quota movements received by 31 October. The Government have every confidence in the Intervention board's ability to cope with the task of administering milk quotas and have no plans to review the decision to transfer responsibility for that work to the board from the milk marketing boards.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what effect the abolition of the milk marketing board will have on the prices of dairy products.

Mr. Jack: The effect on the price of milk products to the consumer under the new arrangements for the marketing of milk will depend on the circumstances of the market for each product.

WALES

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of Eurostar, Intercity and Regional Railways to discuss the effects of delays in London on travellers from south Wales using the channel tunnel services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The timetabling of services is an operational matter for the railway operators. At present, Eurostar is operating only limited introductory services to Paris and Brussels. From early 1995, Eurostar will begin to operate services every two hours during the day, building to hourly services from Waterloo to both Paris and Brussels. As this service builds, the three trains from south Wales to Waterloo will provide good connections with the Eurostar services, in addition to the hourly service for most of the day from south Wales to Paddington.

TRANSPORT

A40/Westway Junctions

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will investigate the phasing of traffic lights on the A40/Westway junctions between the London boundary and the Euston road;

(2) if the phasing of traffic lights on the A40/Westway junctions within London are part of a traffic management scheme to prevent traffic from entering or leaving Central London.

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Butcher dated 31 October 1994:

You raised two questions in the House of Commons in July (numbers 129 and 135) about the phasing of traffic signals at the A40/Westway junctions. These have been passed to me for reply as they raise operational matters for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

I would first confirm that there is no traffic management scheme in operation on the A40/Westway junctions to prevent traffic entering or leaving Central London. Congestion does occur at these junctions but this is due entirely to the volume of traffic passing through them. Essential roadworks such as those recently undertaken along the A40, M25 to the A312, add to the congestion.

With regard to the actual phasing of the traffic signals, those at Long Lane have been bypassed by the improvement scheme which opened recently. The rest of the traffic signals on the A40 are within the North Circular Road and operate under Urban Traffic Control. This is a computer system which alters the timing of the signals at various times of the day so as to minimise the overall delay to traffic.

The Metropolitan Police can override this computer system and introduce alternative (contingency) plans if the level of traffic is severe and they consider it necessary.

Shipping Policy Division

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it remains his intention to transfer the shipping policy division to No. 11 Millbank.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In response to a request in mid-September from one of the members of the HCI lending consortium, my officials made a very rough estimate of the cost of adapting the HCI hospital for use as an NHS hospital. Their co-operation was given in order to assist the banks in examining the full range of options available for the future funding of HCI. My officials made clear that the option of bringing the hospital into NHS use was not one which the Government favoured.

Careers Guidance

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from women on income support about adult careers guidance; and what action on careers advice for adults he plans.

Mr. Lang: I am not aware of having received specific representations from women on income support about adult guidance matters. Guidance on vocational and informal education opportunities is available to adults from a variety of sources, including colleges of further education and the community education service of local authorities. Guidance specifically on employment and training opportunities is available through the Employment Service and the enterprise networks respectively, while the skillchoice initiative now being piloted by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise is designed to bring vocational assessment and guidance to people at work. Guidance is also available, particularly to the unemployed and those on low incomes, through a number of projects funded under the urban programme. I have funded the adult education guidance initiative in Scotland, which, in its second year of operation,will be reporting on best practice and possible future developments for adult guidance principally in the informal education setting.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidelines the Government follow in deciding the amount of cardiac surgery to fund; and whether the amount of cardiac surgery being undertaken in Glasgow is above or below those guidelines;

(2) whether Government funding for heart surgery in Greater Glasgow allows operating units to work to full capacity.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Department of Health, in 1986, set a national guideline of a minimum of 300 coronary artery bypass grafts per million population and the guideline in Scotland is 350 per million. The current level of CABGs is substantially above that level at 436 per million. CABGs represent the large majority of cardiac surgery operations.

The contracts with both the Glasgow royal infirmary NHS Trust and the West Glasgow Hospitals University NHS Trust are worth £11 million in 1994–95 and will enable 1,800 cardiac procedures to be carried out.

Insolvency

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) individual insolvencies and (b) corporate insolvencies there were in each of the last seven years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of individual insolvencies in Scotland for the last seven years was as follows:

	Sequestrations	Protected trust deeds	Total
1987–88	951	36	987
1088–89	1,612	10	1,622
1989–90	2,618	12	2,630
1990–91	5,451	3	5,454
1991–92	8,584	1	9,585
1992–93	11,970	2	11,972
1993–94	4022	282	[1]4,304

[1] Follows implementation of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1993.

Corporate insolvency in Scotland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Lang: The time taken by staff to adjust clocks throughout the Scottish Office is not recorded, and in view of the wide range of circumstances no reasonable estimate can be made.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department is taking to ensure that the reduction in junior doctors' hours will not create or exacerbate shortages of junior doctors in (a) paediatrics and (b) other specialties.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Doctors in training in hard-pressed posts should not be contracted for more than 72 hours per week after 31 December 1994. Additional funding of £1·2 million has been made available in 1994–95, bringing the cumulative total to £9·2 million, to assist NHS employers with the greatest difficulties in meeting the hours targets. It should be possible to make the required reductions in junior doctors' hours by the effective deployment of staff without adversely affecting the level of services to patients.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the present and expected shortage of junior hospital doctors in each of the health board areas in Scotland; and if he will break down these figures by each hospital-based specialty.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of doctors in higher specialist training in Scotland are based on the numbers estimated to be needed for consultant posts in the future. The assessment of the numbers of doctors, including those in training, needed to provide services for patients is a matter for individual NHS trusts in consultation with health boards.

Property Law

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the Scottish Law Commission to report on its review of property law in Scotland and the future of the feudal system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission has now completed the consultation process which followed its discussion paper on the abolition of the feudal system. Several substantial issues have emerged as a result of the consultation process and the commission is unable to give a precise indication as to when its report will be available.

Classical Swine Fever

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of classical swine fever occurred in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: There have been no recorded cases of classical swine fever in Scotland over this period.

Private Finance Initiative

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish and place in the Library a list of all health projects involved in the private finance initiative as at September, setting out in each case the name of the health board or trust, the name of the private firm, and a brief description of the nature of the financial arrangements; and if he will also publish (a) the total of elderly care beds in the scheme and (b) the steps he is taking to ensure proper medical and social care in the light of the recent fatal accident inquiry into the death of an elderly resident.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A list of major health projects which have been completed involving private sector finance at September 1994 has been placed in the Library.

The number of elderly care beds provided by the private sector following approval of schemes by my officials is 785. There may, however, be other projects involving private finance which have been completed, approval of which falls within the delegated limit of the health board or NHS trust concerned. Information on these projects is not held centrally.

In each of the projects involving elderly care and the private finance initiative, the patients are still under NHS care and health boards therefore are responsible, through contracts set, to ensure the quality of the medical and social care provided.

Information Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many calls have been received by the Scottish Office's information line for each month since January; and how much the Scottish Office has spent publicising and administering the information line during this period.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The number of calls received were:

	Number
January	211
February	239
March	199
April	220
May	308
June	315
July	305
August	341
September	334
October (to 21 October)	237

No money has been spent on publicising the inquiry line during this period.

Approximately £21,150 has been spent on administering the line this year.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the addresses of the Scottish Office's information points currently operating, (b) the costs of establishing, publicising and administering these facilities since their establishment and (c) how many people have visited each facility since their establishment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The addresses of 25 Scottish Office information points currently operating are:

Insolvency

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to the Exchequer in each of the past seven years of the processing of insolvencies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The annual total net cost of processing individual insolvencies, including payments to insolvency practitioners and direct administrative expenses, in Scotland, was as follows:

	£ million
1987–88	0·42
1988–89	2·76
1989–90	7·60
1990–91	12·51
1991–92	18·59
1992–93	21·77
1993–94	22·96

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1994]: In the last 12 months, no such travel has been undertaken, either at public expense or at own cost.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much grain was in intervention storage in Scotland in each of the years from 1984 to 1994; and what were the figures for the past five years for (a) the number of farmers on the five-year set-aside scheme, (b) the amount of land, in hectares, in the five-year set-aside scheme and (c) the amount of money paid to farmers in the five-year set-aside scheme in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

(i) Grain in intervention storage in Scotland

Year	'000 tonnes
1984	40
1985	319
1986	594
1987	452

1992	780	23,366	5,037
1993	712	23,766	3,700

Feudal System

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to bring forward legislation to abolish the feudal system in Scotland as outlined in the Scottish Law Commission's discussion paper on the abolition of the feudal system; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The Scottish Law Commission has now completed the consultation process which followed its discussion paper on the abolition of the feudal system. Several substantial issues have emerged as a result of the consultation process and the commission is unable to give a precise indication as to when its report will be available.

The Government are committed to completing the reform of the feudal system and will give careful consideration to the commission's recommendations, when they are received, and to the need for legislation.

Land Ownership and Use

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much (a) urban and (b) rural land, in hectares, is owned by local authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 October 1994]: No figures are kept centrally.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the arable land cover for Scotland in each of the past five years.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

Year
1989	1,065,286
1990	1,046,624
1991	1,023,055
1992	1,022,492
1993	1,019,899

The figures relate to the area of crops and fallow, including set-aside, and grass under five years old.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure access to the countryside for leisure pursuits; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The responsibility for promoting access to the countryside lies with Scottish Natural Heritage and local authorities. My right hon. Friend expects the recently published Scottish Natural Heritage paper, "Enjoying the Outdoors: A Programme for Action", to make a major contribution to the development of wider access to the countryside.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to bring forward legislation to ensure the land register covers all the counties of Scotland; when he envisages its full implementation; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The land register for Scotland was created under the Land Registration (Scotland) Act 1979. At present the land register is operational in seven counties covering more than 40 per cent. of the Scottish housing stock. It is due to be extended to the county of Fife on 1 April 1995, and will be progressively extended to cover the remaining counties by 2003.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much land he expects the Forestry Commission to own in (a) 2000, (b) 2005 and (c) 2010; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 October 1994]: We expect the Forestry Commission to own just over 1 million hectares of land at the end of this century and the early part of the next.

Crofting

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to dispose of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries' crofting estates to community ownership following the Crofters (Scotland) Act 1993; if he plans to bring forward legislation to increase the number of crofts in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 October 1994]: My Department has no plans at present to dispose of its crofting estates; nor are there any plans to bring forward new legislation to increase the number of crofts in Scotland.

Law and Order (Peterhead)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police personnel were stationed at Peterhead police station in each year since 1976.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The information available is as follows:

Police personnel stationed at Peterhead

	Number
1976	39
1980	44
1986	48
1988	55
1992	64
1994	66

Deployment of officers to particular police stations is the responsibility of the chief constable.

ENVIRONMENT

Water and Sewerage

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those water and sewerage companies that have decided not to embark on a policy of installing meters in domestic properties on a compulsory basis;

(2) if he will list those water companies that have a policy of installing meters in domestic households against the wish of the resident.

Mr. Atkins: Only one water and sewerage company, Anglian Water, has so far announced a widespread programme of metering existing domestic properties. The company announced recently a review of the compulsory element of its metering programme. Several water supply companies have decided to install meters in existing domestic properties in certain parts of their area. Most companies have a policy of installing meters in new and substantially converted domestic properties.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has held with the Water Services Association about charging systems for water and sewerage in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has held with water companies or the Water Services Association about the method of charges for water and sewerage in new and refurbished properties.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend and I have discussions with water companies and the water industry associations from time to time about matters of mutual interest. The Water Services Association and the Water Companies Association have recently submitted their views on future methods of charging for water and sewerage services and that is currently being considered. Most water companies require new and substantially converted properties to be metered and charges are recovered on that basis.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the water industry about the connection charge imposed on new properties.

Mr. Atkins: None. This is a matter for the director general of water services.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers rest with the director general of water services to determine a fixed connection charge for new properties.

Mr. Atkins: The Water Industry Act 1991 recognises three separate elements to charging for a new connection to the mains or sewer. A connection charge is payable to cover the direct cost of connecting a new property to the water company's main or sewer. If there is a dispute between the customer and the company about the amount of the charge, the director general of water services has powers to determine the charge. Where it is necessary to requisition the provision of a public water main or sewer, a requisitioning charge is payable. Payment of this charge may be spread over a 12-year period at a rate of interest approved by the director general. When new properties are connected for the first time to a public water main or sewer for domestic purposes, an infrastructure charge is payable. The director general has powers to set limits on each company's infrastructure charges. In his recent periodic review of price limits, the director general set new infrastructure charge limits of £200 each for water and for sewerage. These limits, will apply to all water and sewerage companies from 1 April 1995.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the case of the application by Mr. John Large for documentation held by Her Majesty's pollution inspectorate on past nuclear waste policy and practice with particular reference to the basis for calculation of the cost quoted for the information to be provided; and if he will make a statement on the effectiveness to date of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

Mr. Atkins: The response to Mr. Large quoted a rate of charging for the inspector's time of £993 per man-day. This is the standard rate of charging levied on applicants for authorisation, and includes an allowance for overheads. However, there is a different rate of charging for the provision of information to members of the public, based on the direct costs of inspectorate staff time. The rate varies with the location and grade of staff involved. For staff based in London, the rate is, for example, £33 per hour for a pollution inspector and £19 per hour for an executive officer. The higher rate of charging was inadvertently quoted to Mr. Large. HMIP will be writing again to Mr. Large to apologise and to provide him with the correct charging information.

Regarding the effectiveness to date of the Environmental Information Regulations, I refer the hon. Member to my answer given on 26 January 1994, Official Report, column 240.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) which agency would carry any extra costs associated with the burying of low-level nuclear waste on landfill tips;

(2) what are the estimated costs of burying low-level nuclear waste on landfill tips.

Mr. Atkins: Charges for the disposal of low-level radioactive waste at landfill sites are a commercial matter for the operators of the sites and those disposing of the waste. It is for the site operators to set an appropriate rate, and for the disposers to bear the costs.

Housing Investment

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what percentage of gross domestic product (a) the United Kingdom Government and (b) each other EC country invests in housing;

(2) what percentage of housing stock in each other EC country is provided by the equivalent of housing associations.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Comparable information in the form requested is not available. The booklet "Statistics on Housing in the European Community 1993," published by the European Commission, sets out a range of comparative information which may be of interest to the hon. Member. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Housing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing stock in England and Wales is provided by housing associations.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The proportion of the overall housing stock that was provided by housing associations at the end of December 1993 is estimated as 3·8 per cent. in England and 2·9 per cent. in Wales.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the availability of specialised housing for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Research into the housing needs of elderly people has revealed that there is approximately 16 per cent. more subsidised housing provision for elderly people in England than was previously thought to exist, and that there is currently over-provision of ordinary sheltered housing but under-provision of very sheltered housing. Details are in the table following:

Type of housing provider	Dwellings
Local authorities	465,920
Housing Associations	148,586
Abbeyfield societies	6,230
Almshouses	20,758
Total	641,494

I hope to publish the results of the research later this year.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of dwellings were owner-occupied in each year since 1979; what percentage of owner-occupation resulted from the right-to-buy scheme; and what percentage of properties sold under the right to buy is represented by newly constructed local authority accommodation over the same period.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The available information is given in the table. Information on newly constructed local authority accommodation sold under right-to-buy is not available centrally.

End of Year	Percentage of dwellings which were owner occupied	Percentage of owner occupied dwellings purchased under right-to-buy scheme
1979	56·6	—
1980	57·7	—
1981	58·2	0·6
1982	59·5	2·2
1983	60·5	3·3
1984	61·3	3·9
1985	62·2	4·5
1986	63·2	5·1
1987	64·3	5·6
1988	65·6	6·5
1989	66·6	7·5
1990	67·1	8·1
1991	67·2	8·4
1992	67·2	8·7
1993	67·3	8·9

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were accepted as homeless in rur[illegible]eas for each year since 1979 and for the current year; and how many dwellings were built in such areas in those years by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department collects information about homelessness and about house building for each local authority area. This information does not distinguish between rural and urban areas.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 265, how many tenants of (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) private landlords, occupying (i) one, (ii) two and (iii) three or more bedrooms more than required by members of their household are over retirement age.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 29 October 1994]: The latest available estimates for England are as follows:

Tenants over retirement age and having more bedrooms than the bedroom standard 1993–94
England

Tenure	Number of bedrooms more than bedroom standard
	One thousands	Two thousands	Three or more thousands
Council tenants	530	280	10
Housing associations tenants	60	20	—
Private tenants	160	120	10
All tenants	750	420	20

Note:

"—" indicates less than 5,000.

These figures are from the 1993–94 Survey of English Housing and are subject to sampling error.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Pike: to ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Government have spent on projects for rough sleepers since the introduction of the rough sleepers initiative; and what is the number and capacity of hostels created under the initiative in (a) London and (b) the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Under the rough sleepers initiative the Government are spending £182 million over the period 1990–96 with the aim of making it unnecessary for people to sleep rough on the streets of central London. The bulk of these resources have been channelled through the Housing Corporation to enable housing associations to develop at least 3,300 places in permanent accommodation in flats and houses. The initiative has also funded 950 places in 25 temporary hostels and night shelters in London. In addition, the initiative has funded 700 places in properties leased for up to three years from private sector landlords, an annual winter shelter programme and outreach, resettlement and other support services. No hostel provision has been funded under this initiative outside London.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend the rough sleepers initiative to cover (a) Greater London and (b) other towns and cities.

Mr. Curry: None. The rough sleepers initiative focuses available resources on central London because that is where the greatest concentrations of people sleep rough. Part of the success of this initiative has stemmed from encouraging close links between statutory and voluntary sector agencies. Local authorities outside central London are encouraged to follow this model in devising their strategies to help people sleeping rough within their area.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the budget of, and how many voluntary sector proposals were financed through, the urban programme in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95.

Sir Paul Beresford: The figures for expenditure on voluntary sector projects, and for the number of such projects, funded through the urban programme in the years requested are set out in the table:

Year	Expenditure £ millions (forecast)	Number of Projects (forecast)
1993–94	34·938	1,331
1994–95	[1]22·717	[1]801

[1] These figures exclude the London boroughs of Lewisham and Newham, which are not yet available.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the elderly population lives in sheltered accommodation.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There is no source of data providing a direct count of the numbers of elderly people in sheltered housing in England. The 1991 census does not separately identify households in this form of accommodation.

It is possible to produce an estimate that approximately 8 per cent. of the population aged 65 or over live in sheltered housing.

This estimate is derived from two sources: First, a study of the housing needs of elderly people commissioned by the Department from Ernst and Young management consultants included a survey of residents of sheltered housing which asked a question about household size. Combining this data with information also collected in the study on the numbers of units of sheltered housing for rent produces an estimate of 579,000 elderly people in this form of accommodation. Secondly, to this must be added 51,000 elderly people in private sector sheltered housing. This is calculated in the same way but uses data from local authority housing investment programme returns for 1 April 1993 on units of private sheltered housing.

Shared Ownership Scheme

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the take-up rate of the shared ownership scheme for the elderly.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested, based on returns to the Housing Corporation, is as follows:

	Units
1992–93	335
1993-94	210
1994–95[1]	117

[1] To 30 September 1994.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding new developments for sheltered accommodation by (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) the private sector.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The number of new sheltered housing starts in the first six months of this year is shown in the following table:

Sheltered housing starts: England 1994

	1 January 1994 to 31 March 1994	1 April 1994 to 30 June 1994
Local authorities	5	13
Housing associations	204	284
Private sector	142	234

Air Pollution

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the sites to be included in the enhanced air pollution monitoring programme by 1997, including the time frame for each site.

Mr. Atkins: We are committed to expanding the enhanced urban network from 12 to 24 sites by 1997. The location of new sites is being reviewed in the light of our consultation proposals for the integration of central and local government monitoring networks.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total budget for the air quality research programme for the current year and for 1995–96

Mr. Atkins: The budget for air quality research for the current year, 1994–95, is £9·95 million. The allocation for 1995–96 will be settled in due course.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the review of the air quality research programme.

Mr. Atkins: Information on all projects carried out within the air quality research programme is published annually. This year's report will be produced in November 1994.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total budget for the enhanced urban network air pollution monitoring programme for the current year and for 1995–96.

Mr. Atkins: The total budget for the enhanced urban network air pollution monitoring programme for the current year, 1994–95, is £3·2 million. The provision for 1995–96 will be determined when tenders have been assessed.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what preliminary study his officials have made of the Heilbronn-Neckarsulm experiment banning dirty old cars and lorries to cut air pollution in urban areas, referred to in his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 19 September.

Mr. Atkins: No data have yet been released by the German authorities on the Heilbronn-Neckarsulm experiment. I understand that first results are likely to be published within the next six months. We shall study them when they become available.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the number of empty dwellings owned by Government Departments, and which Departments, for latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information about Government Departments' empty residential property is set out in the table:

	Total stock at 1 April 1994	Empty at 1 April 1994	Empty as percentage of total stock Per cent.
Department of Transport	3,845	887	23
Home Office	[1]4,524	498	11
Ministry of Defence	68,106	11,313	17
Department of Health	[3]15,000	[2]1,800	12
Scottish Office	[4]1,601	158	10
Welsh Office	239	[5]43	18

The management, use and disposal of Government residential property is the responsibility of the Department concerned.

Notes:

[1] Excludes figures for the provincial police authorities.

[2] Most up-to-date figures available are as at 31 December 1992.

[3] Excludes bed-spaces in hostels.

[4] NHS figures included in this stock are as at 1 April 1993.

[5] Excludes properties awaiting demolition or conversion to non-residential use.

Housing Needs Index

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to alter the weight given to homelessness in the housing needs index.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The weights given to homelessness in the 1995–96 housing needs index and the 1995–96 generalised needs index are being held at the same levels as in the 1994–95 indices.

The Government believe, however, that the present mechanisms used to calculate the HNI and the GNI require substantial revision. The Department has recently completed a fundamental review of the indices which looked at all the elements of the current mechanisms and the principles underlying them. We wish to consider further and in detail the changes proposed during the review before making any major changes to the composition of the indices.

Scrap Metal Yards

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many scrap metal yards in the south Yorkshire area are licensed at the present time;

(2) if he will list the scrap metal yards in the south Yorkshire area which have been given licences in each of the past five years.

Mr. Atkins: The recovery of scrap metal is subject to licensing under part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Waste regulation authorities are responsible for issuing licences under section 5 of the 1974 Act and details of them are not held centrally. Section 6(4) of the 1974 Act requires each waste regulation authority to maintain a register containing copies of all current licences which it has issued; and to ensure that its register is open for public inspection at its principal office.

Cockington Valley

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider his decision not to call in the planning application made in respect of the development within the conservation area of Cockington Valley.

Sir Paul Beresford: Torbay borough council issued the planning decision and listed building consent on 28 October. It is now too late for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to reconsider calling in the applications.

Council Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the authorities which have handed their council housing over through the large-scale voluntary transfer scheme and the number and total value of properties concerned.

Mr. Curry: Since 1988, 34 local authorities have transferred a total of 154,081 homes through large-scale voluntary transfer. These authorities are as listed. The tenanted market value of the dwellings transferred is £1,358 million. Tenanted market value reflects the fact that the stock is transferred as a going concern for the long term provision of social rented housing.

Private Consultants

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been paid in fees to private consultants employed by each local authority in the county of Durham in each year since 1989.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Dioxins

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the findings of the United States Environmental Protection Agency's report on dioxins released on 13 September; and if he will reconsider the findings of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution on incineration capacity.

Mr. Aitkins: The United States Environmental Protection Agency's report, though both long and in parts technical, is still a preliminary draft, issued for public comment. Its content and findings will be revised during the coming year in the light of the comments received. The Government are studying the draft report, and intend to complete their own preliminary assessment of it by the end of the year. The Government, in responding to the royal commission, have already given a public reassurance that, in deciding its policy on the use of incineration for waste disposal, it will take into account the advice of the chief medical officer about the implications of this and other major dioxins studies.

Chlorine Production

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation calling for an end to chlorine production.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have no plans to ban the production of chlorine, which is already subject to integrated pollution control. In common with the rest of the European Union, the United Kingdom Government support a science-based approach to evaluating the risk and benefits of substances including chlorine. Existing controls on the production of chlorine are considered to be adequate on the basis of current evaluations of the risks.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to introduce legislation to end the importing of another country's toxic waste; and if he will introduce a new classification to cover such categories of toxic material as the scrap metal contaminated with polychlorinated bi-phenyls.

Mr. Atkins: I refer to my answer to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Benton) on 17 October 1994, Official Report, columns 17–18. All imports into the United Kingdom of waste for disposal, and of hazardous waste for recovery, are covered by the provisions of the EC Waste Shipments Regulation, 259/93, and the United Kingdom Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994, S.I. No. 1137. Scrap metal contaminated by PCBs is therefore covered by existing legislation.

Blue Circle and Decision Makers Ltd

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any Minister in his Department attended a dinner or other function with representatives of Blue Circle and Decision Makers Ltd. at Hampton Court on 12 and 18 June 1993.

Sir Paul Beresford: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the hon. Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) attended a dinner on 25 May 1993 with representatives of Blue Circle, Decision Makers Ltd. and the right hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Dame Angela Rumbold) in his official capacity.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) attended the Conservative women's national dinner on 25 May in a private capacity.

Housing Grants

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of replacing mandatory grants for housing maintenance by loans; and what plans he has to do this.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Loans are one of the options being considered in the current review of the future of private housing renewal programmes. An announcement on the outcome of the review will be made in due course.

Unfit Homes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the report by the National Home Improvement Council on expenditure on improving unfit homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The National Home Improvement Council has made some interesting comments which we will consider in the framework of the current review of the future of private housing renewal programmes.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to set targets to reduce the number of unfit dwellings; and in what time ranges the targets will be set.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is not appropriate to set targets to reduce the number of unfit properties to a particular level. We aim to help improve conditions for those people unable to help themselves and to educate those who can.

Housing Improvements

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue guidance to local authorities to ensure that high standards of housing improvements are achieved by the grant system.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The current guidance to local authorities on the house renovation grant system encourages them to ensure that work is of a high standard before grant is paid.

Housing Maintenance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer (a) to re-introduce MIRAS on loans for housing maintenance and (b) to allow landlords relief for repair costs to be offset against tax rather than rent.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the new formula for standard spending assessments has had on Coventry city council; and where the city would have ranked in England for council tax levels under (a) the old standard spending assessment formula and (b) the new one.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Between 1993–94 and 1994–45 there was a reduction of 3·7 per cent. in Coventry's SSA attributable to the SSA review and the introduction of 1991 census information. Differences in the information available for 1993–94 and 1994–95 make it impossible to disaggregate this figure further.

RSG is distributed so that if all authorities spent at the level of their SSA, then all taxpayers in a given band could pay the same level of council tax whilst receiving a standard level of service. In practice, council tax levels are determined by the local authority's own decisions on spending levels and the use of reserves, not by standard spending assessments.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his target maximum percentage rise in standard spending assessments over the next two years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced increases in total standard spending for 1995–96 and 1996–7. They were laid before the House in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1994–95" on 30 November 1993. Paragraph 5·75, page 104, refers to them.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with his colleagues on the effects on standard spending assessments of establishing new police authorities and the implementation of universal nursery education.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: On the standard spending assessments for the police, there has been continuous contact between officials about development of the formula. Ministers in the Home Office and in my Department are jointly considering the options.

The Government are considering the implications of the commitment to nursery education and will announce its conclusions in due course.

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding local government expenditure.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend will make a statement on the provisional 1995–96 revenue support grant settlement for local authorities shortly after my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor's Budget statement.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 25 October, Official Report, column 541, under what United Kingdom legislation environmental assessments are required before consent is given in respect of the operation of any offshore oil and gas production, exploration or appraisal installation within 25 miles of the coast or in environmentally sensitive areas beyond 25 miles.

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Direct Services Organisations

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken against those local authorities whose direct services organisations failed to meet statutory financial objectives in 1992–93.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: One hundred and three statutory notices have been served on 71 local authorities concerning the failure of their DSOs to meet the required financial objective in 1992–93. To date, we have announced final decisions on 81 of the notices.

My right hon. Friend has now considered the responses of the remaining authorities on whom notices were served in June, July and August. He has today given 13 directions to the following local authorities:

(a) Allerdale district council (other cleaning, refuse collection), requiring the authority to seek the Secretary of State's consent if it wishes to award work on the defined activity to their DSO following re-tendering which is currently in hand.

(b) Bedfordshire county council (highways and sewerage), preventing the authority from carrying out the defined activity if it fails to meet the financial objective for the work in 1994–95.

(c) London borough of Camden (other catering, school and welfare catering, sport and leisure management). The other catering and school and welfare catering direction prevent the authority from carrying out all or some of the defined activity through its own DSO. For sport and leisure management the direction requires the authority to re-tender the work and subsequently seek the Secretary of State's consent if it wishes to award it to their DSO.

(d) Canterbury city council (building maintenance), preventing the authority from carrying out the defined activity if it fails to meet a specific financial objective for the work in 1994–95 and the statutory financial objective for 1995–96.

(e) Corby district council (sport and leisure management), requiring the authority to re-tender some of the work if they fail to meet the financial objective in 1994–95.

(f) London borough of Ealing (sport and leisure management), requiring the authority to seek the Secretary of State's consent if it wishes to award work on the defined activity to their DSO following re-tendering which is currently in hand.

(g) Kerrier district council (sport and leisure management), requiring the authority to re-tender all of the work if it fails to meet the financial objective in 1994–95.

(h) Leicester county council (building cleaning), preventing the authority, from carrying out the activity through its own DSO from 1 January 1996.

(i) Rochester-upon-Medway city council (sport and leisure management), requiring the authority to re-tender the work and subsequently seek the Secretary of State's consent if it wishes to award it to their DSO, and,

(j) Slough borough council (sport and leisure management), requiring the authority to seek the Secretary of State's consent if it wishes to award work on the defined activity to their DSO following re-tendering which is currently in hand.

The Secretary of State has also decided to take no further statutory action on this occasion against Camden (other cleaning), Kingswood (sport and leisure management), Northampton (building maintenance), Peterborough (building maintenance), Selby (sport and leisure management), South Bedfordshire (sport and leisure management), Stafford (sport and leisure management), and Wellingborough (highways and sewerage, building maintenance).

A statutory financial objective is set for local authority DSOs to ensure that bids are realistically priced and services delivered at that price.

For the financial year 1992–93, 350 DSOs out of a total of 2,400, failed to meet the prescribed financial objectives. This underlines the need for local authorities to take firm steps to address and correct any financial problems in DSOs, and for the Secretary of State to use the powers given to him by Parliament to ensure that this happens.

In 70 per cent. of the cases notified to the Department, local authorities had already taken action to reduce costs, improve management or, in some cases, withdraw from the activity concerned, and no statutory action was called for.

Over the year, statutory notices were served in respect of 103 accounts, leading to 39 directions. In the remaining cases, the authorities' responses and proposals for action were sufficient for the Secretary of State to be satisfied that no further statutory action was necessary. In addition, 30 out of the 39 directions reflected authorities' projections that their DSOs would meet the prescribed financial objective; the directions required retendering of work or closure of the DSO only if the projected results were not in the event achieved.

The remaining nine directions required authorities to take further action beyond that already proposed—in four cases this involved the closure of the DSOs in question.

I should emphasise that the great majority of DSOs deliver services successfully and meet the prescribed financial objectives. Where problems arise, authorities have the primary responsibility for taking the necessary steps, and the majority of authorities do so without any intervention or prompting by the Department. Their responsible action is to be commended.

Local authorities are required to submit DSO accounts for 1993–94 to the Department not later than today, 31

October. My right hon. Friend will consider shortly what action would be appropriate in respect of any accounts that fail to meet the statutory financial objective in the year.

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state, in relation to his decision to open the docklands light railway to an offer of franchise (a) to whom the franchise will revert at the conclusion of the stated period, (b) whether Railtrack will own the railway infrastructure and (c) what is the current ratio between current fare-box takings, including joint ticketing income and annual revenue costs.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Docklands Light Railway Limited (DLR Ltd) will let a vertical franchise to the private sector, transferring specific responsibilities in relation to both DLR infrastructure and operations. Reversion will be to DLR Ltd. The Government have no plans to transfer the infrastructure to Railtrack. The current ratio between the current farebox takings, including joint ticketing income, and annual revenue costs is 1:3·4.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects the first applications for grants for national lottery funding to be made.

Mr. Sproat: I understand that most of the distributing bodies intend to invite applications from 4 January 1995.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assistance his Department has provided the national lottery distributory bodies with regard to setting up their operations.

Mr. Sproat: My Department and the other Departments with lottery responsibilities have provided the distributing bodies with all possible assistance in setting up their systems.

Independent Television Franchises

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has for allowing takeovers of failing television companies holding the franchise.

Mr. Dorrell: The present ITV ownership rules allow the takeover of a Channel 3 company provided that no one company holds more than two licences. The rules are being looked at as part of the review on cross-ownership.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he will next meet the chairman of the Independent Television Association to discuss the independent television franchises.

Mr. Dorrell: I am meeting the chairman of the Independent Television Commission on 2 November. I expect to discuss a number of issues, including Channel 3.

Performing Arts (Teesside)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assistance is given to develop performing arts on Teesside.

Mr. Sproat: Public sector support for the performing arts on Teesside is provided through a partnership between Northern Arts, which is largely centrally funded by the Arts Council, and the local authorities in the area. In 1993–94 this support amounted to over £1·3 million, with approximately £700,000 from Northern Arts and more than £300,000 each from Cleveland county council and the district councils.

Millennium Fund Projects

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to ensure a geographical distribution of millennium fund projects.

Mr. Dorrell: The Millennium Commission has been directed that it must take account of the objective of ensuring that major projects are supported in each country of the United Kingdom when considering applications for lottery funds.

Statues

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to encourage the erection of more statues (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Dorrell: I do not currently have any plans to encourage the erection of more statues.

Media Ownership

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he now expects to publish the results of his consultation on media ownership and cross-ownership.

Mr. Dorrell: An announcement about the outcome will be made once the Government have determined the best way forward.

Sport in Schools

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what importance he attaches to competitive sport in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: I consider competitive sport in schools to be of the utmost importance in enabling children to learn to work together as a team within a framework of rules. This is an essential skill for adult life and we are currently working with the Department for Education on proposals for putting competitive sport back at the heart of school life.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he is taking to improve facilities for school sport.

Mr. Sproat: The Sports Council supports the community use of school sports facilities and has provided £12 million for upgrading existing facilities or building new ones over the last 11 years. In addition, schools satisfying certain criteria will be eligible to receive national lottery funds for dual use facilities when they come on stream in 1995.

Popular Music Industry

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations have taken place with representatives of the popular music industry to discuss the future of the industry.

Mr. Sproat: My Department maintains regular contacts with representatives of the popular music industry at ministerial and official levels.

Sportsmatch Scheme

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding the Sportsmatch scheme to promote business sponsorship of sport.

Mr. Sproat: I have received a number of letters from hon. Members and others regarding the Sportsmatch scheme. I have replied to one from my hon. Friend recently.

Arts Sponsorship

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to promote business sponsorship of the arts.

Mr. Dorrell: Over the last 20 years, businesses have increasingly recognised the commercial benefits that flow from their links with excellence in the arts. The Government have welcomed and actively encouraged this trend, and the resulting strengthening of the arts economy. Growth in business sponsorship has been developed and maintained by the efforts of the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts, and through the Government's own business sponsorship incentive scheme, which since it inception in 1984 has attracted more than £82 million in new money to the arts.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the channel tunnel on the United Kingdom tourism industry.

Mr. Dorrell: I believe that the channel tunnel is an exciting opportunity for the United Kingdom tourism industry. With more than 60 per cent. of visitors to the United Kingdom already coming from western Europe, and France—our second largest market in terms of overseas visitors—there is clearly great potential for the industry to exploit.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what study he is making of the availability of stone and other traditional building materials for repairs to historic buildings.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of the Environment's building research establishment undertakes research into the selection and availability of building materials in the British Isles. It has published the following relevant reports:

Title	Year of publication
The Building Limestones of the British Isles	1993
The Building Sandstones of the British Isles	1986
The Building Magnesian Limestones of the British Isles	1988
The Building Slates of the British Isles	1991

English Heritage is shortly to commence a study into the problems facing the fissile stone slate industry in the Cotswolds and the Peak district. English Heritage is also funding research into supplies of lime for conservation mortars, plasters and renders and will be publishing a directory of small-scale lime burning and ready mixed materials traditionally used in conservation work.

Library Commission

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding his proposals for a library commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: We received more than 150 responses to our public consultation paper on a new library and information commission, of which most were strongly in favour. The Government have therefore decided to proceed with the establishment of the commission from January 1995, thus providing an influential new forum for the development of policy on library provision.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the costs of training (a) an Insolvency Service examiner, (b) an E grade examiner and (c) a D grade examiner.

Mr. Heseltine: The direct costs associated with the basic professional and technical training of an E grade examiner are £7,000 and for a D grade are £8,500. These do not include the salary cost of the examiner or of internal presenters and tutors.

In addition, examiners undergo development and management training and have the opportunity to progress to full accountancy qualification.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the Insolvency Service's LOIS computer system in the event of the recommendation of Stoy Hayward in respect of contracting out Insolvency Service work being accepted.

Mr. Heseltine: Consideration will be given to the application of the Insolvency Service LOIS computer system in the event that the case administration work of official receivers is contracted out.

Creditors' Committees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many creditors' committees were appointed for each of the last three years for (a) creditors' voluntary liquidations, (b) compulsory liquidations and (c) individual bankruptcies.

Mr. Heseltine: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Post Office

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice he has given Post Office Counters Ltd. on whether it is bound by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to ensure that where a main office's work is franchised to a private retail outlet its former employees working for the franchisee should enjoy the same pay and conditions as hitherto.

Mr. Eggar: This is an operational matter for the Post Office.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the privatisations which his Department has promoted since 1979 indicating, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Heseltine: The information requested on proceeds from privatisations promoted by my Department and the former Department of Energy since 1979 is given in the table. The current market value of companies is not held centrally by my Department.

Samsung

Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement setting out the role of his Department in helping to attract Samsung's recent investment to Stockton-on-Tees.

Mr. Eggar: My Department took the lead in discussions with Samsung about the company's decision to locate its manufacturing complex in Cleveland. The Department's Invest in Britain Bureau, whose role it is to promote overseas investment in the United Kingdom, has been in close contact with Samsung for several months. Discussions about the regional financial support offer were conducted by the Department's industrial development unit. The support offered was neutral between alternative United Kingdom locations and left the decision for Samsung to make on commercial and operational grounds. Throughout, my Department also maintained contact with other Departments, the Government office for the north-east and a number of local authorities and other agencies including the Northern Development Company and English Partnerships.

I am delighted to note that these efforts, together with the £58 million financial support offered, influenced Samsung's decision to locate in Cleveland, a decision which I am sure will bring significant and lasting benefits to the company, to Cleveland and the north-east region and to the country as a whole.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Heseltine: The current average cost of preparing an answer, as announced on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 387 by the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury, my right hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr Dorrell) is assessed as being £97 for a written question and £225 for an oral question.

Consumer Councils

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of the spending powers devolved by the National Consumer Council to the Welsh Consumer Council; and what authority is devolved to officers of the Welsh Consumer Council.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Welsh Consumer Council's budget is set at a level agreed between the national and the Scottish and Welsh Consumer Councils from the grant in aid that the National Consumer Council receives from the Department of Trade and Industry. The Welsh Consumer Council has established procedures for controlling and monitoring its own expenditure within the agreed limit. Decisions on incurring actual expenditure are taken by council, but authority for payment of goods and services received is delegated to its director. The director of the National Consumer Council, as accounting officer, is responsible, under the grant in aid conditions, for ensuring that expenditure by all three councils is properly authorised and contained within the agreed allocation.

Business Probity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new proposals he has to improve business probity and ethics.

Mr. Heseltine: As part of its programme of reviewing company law, my Department will publish a consultation document early in 1995 on directors' duties. This will invite views on proposals for a statement of directors' duties and for reforming part X of the Companies Act on the enforcement of fair dealing by directors.

Coal Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the salaries of the chairman and chief executive of the Coal Authority.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Sir David White as part-time chairman of the Coal Authority receives a salary of £18,000 a year for one day per week. Mr Neville Washington, who will be full-time chief executive, receives a salary of £55,000 plus pension and a car allowance. He is also eligible for a non-pensionable performance bonus.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will name the consultants he has employed to give advice on disposal of British Coal's property interests; what are their terms of reference; when their commission was (a) started and (b) completed; and what was the cost.

Mr. Eggar: No consultants have been commissioned by the Department to advise on the disposal of British Coal's non-operational property interests, which are a matter for the corporation.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Coal Authority's budget in 1994–95; and what budget is planned for 1995–96.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The net provision for the Coal Authority in 1994–95, as published in the revised estimates in June, is £30·9 million. The provision for 1995–96 is currently under consideration and will be published in the 1995–96 supply estimates in March 1995.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the method and timetable of the disposal of British Coal's property interests.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal. The corporation is currently considering the options for transferring its non-operational land and property to the private sector. No decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will name each member of the Coal Authority; and if he will give details of their experience and background.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have today announced the appointment of five part-time members of the Coal Authority. The Coal Authority now comprises:

Sir David White DL (part-time Chairman), Chairman of the Mansfield Brewery plc, of the Nottingham Health Authority, and of the Board of Governors, the Nottingham Trent University.

Mr. Neville Washington (full-time member), who was Director of Human Resources and Operations at the Victoria Infirmary, a NHS Trust Hospital in Glasgow. Previously he was in the armed forces, leaving the army in 1992 as a Lieutenant Colonel.

Mr. John Cunliffe, barrister and, until his recent retirement, a senior legal adviser within The Royal Dutch/Shell Group of Companies and Secretary of The "Shell" Transport and Trading Company, plc.

Mr. Eric Hassall, a qualified chartered engineer currently Chairman of Wardell Armstrong, mining consultants. He is a Member of Council of the Natural Environment Research Council. His previous career included working as the Crown Mineral Agent and employment with the (then) National Coal Board.

Mr. Roy Lynk OBE, National President of the Union of Democratic Mineworkers from 1987 to 1993 and General Secretary from 1985. He was previously a full-time official of the National Union of Mineworkers from 1979, after 19 years as a branch official.

He was a coal face worker for nearly thirty years. Mr. Lynk was a Councillor on Ashfield District Council for eight years.

Mr. Leslie Rendell, the retiring Director of Planning and Transport of Warwickshire County Council and the immediate past President of the County Planning Officers' Society. Until recently he was Chairman of the West Midlands Regional Aggregates Working Party. He has served as a planning officer in seven counties, including two coal producing regions. His particular interests include environmental sustainability.

Mr. Tom Slee, a Chartered Accountant and Finance Director of Pittencrieff Resources plc, an Edinburgh-based oil and gas company. He is also a non-executive director of Royal London Mutual Insurance Society Ltd. His previous career was with Costain Group, Courtaulds and KPMG Peat Marwick.

Parliamentary Lobbyists

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the parliamentary lobbyists contracted to the regulators of privatised utilities over the past three years and their cost.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the regulators.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much uranium recovered for reprocessing is stored at British Nuclear Fuels plc's facility at Capenhurst; what plans there are to increase the amount; and by how much.

Mr. Eggar: Some 10,000 tonnes of uranium as uranium trioxide, recovered from reprocessing irradiated fuel, is currently stored on the Capenhurst site of British Nuclear Fuels plc. The bulk of this material is owned by BNFL's reprocessing customers and the amount to be stored in the future is a commercial matter for the parties concerned.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for the Environment of 25 October, Official Report, column 541, under what United Kingdom legislation he requires environmental assessments before giving consent in respect of the operation at any offshore oil or gas production installation within 25 miles of the coast or in environmentally sensitive areas more than 25 miles offshore.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Environmental assessments are required before consent is given in respect of the operations of any offshore oil and gas production installation within 25 miles of the coast or in environmentally sensitive areas beyond 25 miles by conditions incorporated into licences granted under the Petroleum (Production) Act 1934. Environmental assessments are not required for oil and gas exploration and appraisal.

House of Fraser

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what formal or informal representations he or any of his Ministerial colleagues or their predecessors received as from (a) any right hon. Member of hon. Member or (b) any other person regarding the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors' report on the takeover of the House of Fraser; what departmental record exists of such representations; and if they were reported to the Cabinet Secretary.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department has received a very large number of representations concerning the takeover of House of Fraser and the DTI inspectors' report. It would not be possible to provide a complete record of these representations without incurring disproportionate cost. The hon. Member may recall that the matter was discussed in the House on 4 April 1989 and on 7 March 1990, and in another place on 3 April 1989, on 7 March 1990 and 28 March 1990. The matter was also referred to in the proceedings of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry. A number of hon. Members also asked questions on the subject. Such representations are not, as a general rule, reported to the Cabinet Secretary.

Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 412, what action he has taken to obtain Lord Archer's consent to releasing the information that Lord Archer provided to those compiling the report.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 28 October 1994]: I have taken no such action.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies from overseas qualified for regional selective assistance between (a) March 1979 and June 1983, (b) June 1983 and June 1987 and (c) June 1987 and May 1992; and what was the total amount of regional selective assistance paid to them in each period.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The number of offers of regional selective assistance made to foreign-owned companies in each of the periods and the amount of grant paid was as follows:

	Number of offers made	Amount paid in period £ million
1 March 1979 to 30 June 1983	203	22.5
1 July 1983 to 30 June 1987	274	31.5
1 July 1987 to 31 May 1992	275	81.5

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many jobs were created by those overseas companies receiving regional selective assistance between (a) March 1979 and June 1983, (b) June 1983 and June 1987 and (c) June 1987 and May 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The number of jobs created by foreign-owned companies related to offers of regional selective assistance accepted in the periods was as follows:

Period	Number of Jobs to date
1 March 1979 to 30 June 1983	13,815
1 July 1983 to 30 June 1987	23,418
1 July 1987 to 31 May 1992	14,420

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many inward investments which received regional selective assistance between (a) March 1979 and

June 1993, (b) between June 1983 and June 1989 and (c) between June 1989 and May 1992 have since closed the operation for which the grants were received and, in the case of (a) and (b), how many such closures have taken place in the past four years.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 27 October 1994]: Regional selective assistance projects are normally monitored for only a limited number of years after final payment of the grant; complete information on this question is not available.

TREASURY

Back-to-work Bonus

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will explain the tax treatment of a back-to-work bonus of up to £1,000 claimed by a part-time worker who has entered into full-time employment under the scheme announced by the Secretary of State for Social Security on 24 October.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the back-to-work lump sum cash bonus of the new job seeker's allowance will be treated for tax purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The tax treatment of the back-to-work bonus will be announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget.

Tax Exemptions (MEPs)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent United Kingdom Members of the European Parliament are exempt from United Kingdom taxation.

Sir George Young: United Kingdom members of the European Parliament are exempt from United Kingdom taxation in only one respect. A ruling of the European Court of Justice in 1981 said that expense allowances intended to defray costs, paid by the European Parliament to its Members, are not liable to United Kingdom tax.

Royal British Legion

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the proposed imposition of value added tax on membership subscription to the Royal British Legion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no VAT on membership subscriptions to the Royal British Legion where the subscription confers no facility or advantage for the subscriber other than the right to participate in its management or receive reports of its activities.

Customs and Excise officials are discussing with the legion its existing arrangements for accounting for VAT on the elements of subscriptions which provide entitlement to use of the social facilities of its clubs.

Tiger Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 754 what happened to the tiger products seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in the period 1989 to 1994.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are no disposal records for 1989, but the 1990 seizure was loaned to a zoological establishment to feature in an endangered species exhibition. The remaining items, from 1991 up to the present time, have either been destroyed or retained by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise for display or training purposes and to form the nucleus of a reference collection of tiger derivatives.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, if he will give details of the country of origin of tiger products seized between 1989 and 1994.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs records for 1989 and 1990 seizures do not contain details of the country of either export or origin.

Further to my answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 754, four musk and tiger–bone plasters were mistakenly described as tiger bones, and according to recently received scientific advice the 13 claws derived from lion only. For convenience, therefore, the following list reproduces the corrected information on seizures from 1991 to date, together with available details of countries of origin where known—COO—or, when not, the countries whence consigned—CWC:

Year	Seizure	COO	CWC
1991	Handbag		Australia
1992	—
1993	Skin, 1 whole & 1 piece		India
	1 pair of shoes		Saudi Arabia
	Tincture of tigerbone—2 bottles	China
	Tiger bone plaster:
	—20 packets		USA
	—12 packets		Hong Kong
	—11 packets	China
	Tiger bone pills:
	—50 boxes		Hong Kong
	—1 box	China
	—420 tablets	China
	Tiger bone medicine:
	—1 packet & 3 sachets	China
	Tiger claws		India
1994	Tiger bone plasters:
	—20		Tanzania
	—4	China
	—2	N/k	N/k
	Tincture of tiger bone—20 x 70 cl bottles	China	USA

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, how many prosecutions followed the seizures of tiger products in the period since 1989.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 754, what information he has of the intended destination of the tiger products seized between 1989 and 1994.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: With one exception, customs' action was confined to seizure of the goods and there is no information on the intended destinations apart from the importers' addresses.

In the one case which was investigated for deliberate evasion, customs was satisfied that a medicinal product had been imported to treat a genuine medical complaint and that there were no grounds to support legal proceedings.

Vehicle Licensing System

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received about the proposed changes to the vehicle licensing system;

(2) what plans he has for concessions for the classic car sector from the proposed changes to the vehicle licensing system;

(3) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the proposed changes to the vehicle licensing system will encourage registration among those who formerly avoided road tax;

(4) what assessment he has made of the effect of (a) use-based charges and (b) flat-rate registration fees on car use;

(5) what assessment he has made of the effect of the changes to the vehicle licensing system on small businesses concerned with classic car restoration.

Sir George Young: My right hon. learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations about the proposed changes to the vehicle licensing system which will introduce a system of continuous licensing based on possession rather than use for all cars and motorcycles. The aim of the change, together with the measure to improve the quality of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's vehicle register, is to counter vehicle excise duty evasion, which costs the taxpayer £145 million or more in lost revenue each year, and assist police efforts against car-related crime. Details of how the new system will operate have yet to be decided. A consultation document, to be issued later this year, will seek views from interested parties.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the Treasury's cash and running costs limits in 1994–95.

Mr. Nelson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVII, vote 1 will be increased by a token £1,000 from £77,363,000 to £77,364,000. The net increase is mainly to meet the cost of the grant in aid to the private finance panel executive as announced on 21 July, Official Report, column 426 and will be fully offset by savings from within the vote.

The running costs limit will be reduced by £885,000 from £80,969,000 to £80,084,000 mainly reflecting the transfer of the cost of security guards—£830,000—to the Cabinet Office, class XIX, vote 1.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the Central Statistical Office's cash and running costs limits in 1994–95.

Mr. Nelson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVII, vote 13 will be increased by £3,221,000 from £44,781,000 to £48,002,000 and the running costs limit by £3,261,000 to £48,463,000. These increases reflect:

(a) A transfer from the Department of National Heritage (Class XI, Vote 7) (£3,080,000), in respect of funding for the International Passenger Survey.

(b) A transfer from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Class III, vote 5) (£36,000), in respect of the collection of producer prices information.

(c) The take up of entitlement under the end year flexibility scheme for running costs (£105,000).

(d) Additional running costs in respect of increased sales of publications, offset by a corresponding increase in Appropriations in aid (£40,000).

(e) Expenditure required to fund a capital project, offset by a corresponding increase in Appropriations in aid (£100,000).

The increase are offset by inter-departmental transfers and additional receipts or are charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Running Costs

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the current annual cost of maintaining and running the House of Lords.

Mr. Newton: The information requested can be obtained from the House of Lords "Annual Report and Accounts", HL 86, a copy of which is held in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Disabled People

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the resultant additional expenses, in particular the services of a carer, can be reimbursed by the appropriate administrative department when the hearing of a case at a Crown, county or magistrates court involving a disabled person has to be re-sited because of difficulties of access for that disabled person.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In criminal cases, additional travelling and associated costs properly incurred by a disabled witness or successful defendant may be allowed from public funds. The costs incurred by a carer who necessarily attends may also be allowed. In civil proceedings, the parties' costs are a matter to be determined by the court.

Northern Ireland Court Service

Mr. Coe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary Lord Chancellor's Department, what changes have been made to the class IX vote 3 cash limit and running costs limit for the Northern Ireland court service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IX, vote 3 has been increased by £758,000 from £26,151,000 to £29,909,000 and the running costs limit by £758,000 from £17,254,000 to £18,012,000. The vote is eligible for a cash limit increase of £94,000 in respect of the end-year flexibility arrangements for running costs. This supplementary estimate gives effect to that increase. The further increase arises out of the transfer from the Crown property unit of the cost of the payment of contributions in lieu of rates.

ENVIRONMENT

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the privatisations which his Department has promoted since 1979 indicating, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Sir Paul Beresford: Since 1979, my Department has promoted the following privatisations:

Sale	Date of Sale	Net Proceeds from Sale £ millions
Shares in 10 water holding companies	December 1989	[1]5,093·7
Property Services Agency (PSA) Projects	1 December 1992	–49·9
PSA Services Building Management (BM) Scotland	1 September 1993	3·5
PSA Services BM Manchester	1 October 1993	–11·5
PSA Services North East BM	1 October 1993	8·0
PSA Services BM South East and BM South West	1 October 1993	10·4

My Department promoted the sale of the Crown Suppliers in 1990. The sale was not concluded and the organisation closed on 31 March 1991.

In addition, the Hydraulics Research Station became private research association on 1 April 1982.

Details of the current value of each holding are not a matter for my Department.

[1] Includes the sale of Welsh Water by the Secretary of State for Wales.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the powers which rest with the Director General of Water Services to determine the method of charging for water and sewerage services in England and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: The method of charging water and sewerage services in England and Wales is a matter for the water and sewerage companies. The Director General of Water Services has no powers to determine the method of charging, but he does have powers, in section 2 of the Water Industry Act 1991, to ensure—subject to his obligation to secure that the companies can properly finance the carrying out of their functions—that the interests of customers and potential customers are protected as regards the fixing and recovery of charges by the companies.

Commission for New Towns

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is to be the new chairman of the Commission for New Towns; and who are its board members.

Sir Paul Beresford: An announcement about the new chairman of CNT will be made in due course. The current board members are as follows:

Sir Neil Shields MC (Chairman)
Lord Finsberg MBE (Deputy Chairman)
Lord Bellwin JP
Mr. R. B. Caws OBE
Mr. F. C. Graves OBE, DL
Sir Brian Jenkins GBE
Ms W. Luscombe
Mr. M. H. Mallinson
Lady Marsh
Mr. J. R. Trustam Eve

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Sir Paul Beresford: The latest estimate of the costs of preparing answers to both written and oral questions was given in the reply by the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury, my right hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell) to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 387.

Teesside Development Corporation

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what current developments Teesside development corporation has in hand; and if he will make a statement on progress to date.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Teesside development corporation has the following schemes currently under way: At Hartlepool, the corporation has just opened a major new tourist attraction, the Hartlepool historic quay, which is well on its way to achieving its target of 250,000 visitors per annum. The opening of the centre has already led to the attraction of substantial private sector investment in complementary developments such as a factory shopping complex, superstore, food courts, public house and restaurant and negotiations are also under way for further commercial and residential schemes.

At Teesside the corporation is continuing in its drive to transform 100 hectares of formerly derelict land into a high-quality development incorporating commercial, office, residential, retail, educational and leisure facilities. To that end, the Tees barrage, which was commissioned in September 1994, will be fully operational in 1995. This will dramatically improve the environment and water quality of the Tees providing a prestigious and dramatic setting for water sports and recreation. It will also lead to the attraction of further private investment on high-quality sites with attractive water frontage.

Preston farm, the corporation's main industrial and business site continue to attract new private sector investment. The latest success is the announcement of the creation of 1,000 new jobs within a three-year period by the international cable company COMCAST.

Overall, the Teesside development corporation in its first six years to 31 March 1994 has achieved the following:

- 7,000 new jobs in new floorspace
- 274,000 sq m of new floorspace
- 700 houses completed with a further 350 underway.
- £715 million of private sector investment attracted to the area.
- 330 hectares of land reclaimed.
- Over 6,000 jobs provided in the construction industry.
- Over 300 companies assisted to expand and/or to relocate to Teesside
- £53 million of receipts.
- £10 million of European assistance secured.
- Integrated the community into its developments by promoting schemes such as social and sheltered housing, training initiatives, a new University College, two nursing homes, a Community Farm, an Enterprise and Training Centre and wide-spread environmental improvements.

Belgrave Residents Association, Leicester

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will invite the district auditor to investigate the use of public money by the Belgrave residents association in the city of Leicester and the means by which it came by and disposed of public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No. If my hon. Friend has concerns about the use of local authority funds he should refer the matter to the district auditor for investigation.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his policy on limiting increases in SSAs over the next two years for local authority expenditure levels;

(2) what discussions he has had with his colleagues regarding levels of SSAs; and what effects these will have on local government expenditure over the next two years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend regularly discusses the future spending needs of local government with colleagues. Conclusions from these discussions will be announced in due course.

Leicester City Council

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will invite the district auditor to investigate the sale by Leicester city council of land to a temple, a mosque and a gurdwara in Hamilton in Leicester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No. This is not a matter for the Government. If my hon. Friend has concerns about any financial transactions by the local authority he should refer the matter to the district auditor.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will estimate the number of hereditaments where the transition for the 1990 change is likely to be incomplete at 31 March 1995 but is likely to be (i) complete and (ii) more nearly complete at 1 April 1995 by virtue of a reduction in the rateable value from the date;

(2) how many hereditaments in England which currently fall (a) below and (b) above the threshold of rateable value, for determining whether the lower limit on year-on-year increases in non-domestic rates bills applies, there are estimated to be for which the transition to the rateable value and national non-domestic rate introduced in April 1990 will not have been completed at 31 March 1995; and if he will estimate (i) the average percentage and (ii) the aggregate amount by which the 1994–95 rates bills for those hereditaments falls below the amount which would have been payable without transitional relief.

Mr. Curry: The information about properties in England which are currently in transition is contained in the table. Assuming for illustrative purposes that the rate poundage is unchanged in real terms between 1994–95 and 1995–96, preliminary results from the 1995 revaluation suggest that 35,000 of an estimated 330,000 properties in transition at 31 March 1995 would find themselves with no further increase next year and 50,000 would be closer to reaching their full liability than they are now.

3. Column 4 is column 3 less column 2.
4. Column 5 is column 2 as a percentage of column 3.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what studies he has commissioned, internally and from external consultants, of the likely impact of the April 1995 revaluation of non-domestic property in England on rateable values and non-domestic rate bills in different regions and different sectors of the economy; if he will publish those studies, or summary thereof; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the regions, sectors and types of hereditament most affected by large increases or decreases in non-domestic rates.

Mr. Curry: The Inland Revenue is analysing the results of the revaluation as they come in. Although numbers are subject to change, our current estimate of the effect of the revaluation on rateable values is given in the table. The effect on rates bills will depend on the multiplier which is determined for 1995–96, and on the final form of our proposed transitional arrangements for the 1995 revaluation, details of which are contained in a consultation paper that we issued on 3 October. Copies of the consultation paper are in the Library and we expect to announce our decisions by the end of November.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hereditaments in England which fall (a) below and (b) above the threshold rateable value, for determining whether the lower limit on year-on-year increases in non-domestic rates bills applies, there are estimated to be whose rates bills for 1995–96 in the absence of transitional relief and assuming the rate poundage as adjusted for the revaluation is indexed for inflation would be (i) under 50 per cent., (ii) between 50 and 80 per cent., (iii) between 80 and 120 per cent., (iv) between 120 and 200 per cent., (v) between 200 and 500 per cent. and (vi) over 500 per cent. of their bills for 1994–95; and if he will estimate for each of those categories the aggregate increase or decrease in the rates bills between the two years.

Mr. Curry: Estimates for England based on preliminary results of the 1995 revaluation are given in the table. It has been assumed for illustrative purposes that the rate poundage is unchanged in real terms between 1994–95 and 1995–96.

2. Totals may not sum due to rounding.

3. Small properties have a 1 April 1990 rateable value less than £10,000 (£15,000 in London).

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the regions, sectors and types of hereditament where there is the greatest incidence of incomplete transition to the rateable value and national non-domestic rate introduced in April 1990.

Mr. Curry: The greatest incidence of property in England currently remaining in transition under the 1990 scheme is the inner London, with 45 per cent. of its properties in transition. The incidence is greater than elsewhere for each main sector of the economy, regardless of whether the 1 April 1990 rateable value of property is more or less than the £15,000 threshold used for determining entitlement to transitional relief. The figures for each class of property are given in the table.

Repair Costs

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has on the number of local authorities which have incurred significant losses as a result of a failure to bill leaseholders for repair costs.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None. The Department does not collect information in this form.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigation his Department is making into Westminster city council's failure to recover repair costs from leaseholders.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is not the role of the Department to carry out such investigations. This is a matter for the authority's auditors.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the qualification of Westminster city council's accounts for 1993–94.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No. This is a matter for the local authority and its appointed auditor.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the additional cost to tenants in Westminster of the failure of the council to recover repair costs from leaseholders.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department has no details of the alleged undercharging by Westminster city council, and has made no estimate of the cost to tenants.

Council Tax

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the date by which the last council tax banding appeals are expected to be heard (a) by county and (b) by district in Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We expect four out of five initial appeal period appeals to be settled before the end of this year. The remainder will be settled as soon as possible in 1995. I cannot estimate a date by which all such appeals will have been settled since a few may be affected by special factors—such as an appeal on a point of law to the High Court.

In limited circumstances—for example, on a change of occupier or in the case of a material change affecting the property—appeals can still be made after the end of the initial period.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the percentage of new properties awaiting banding, which has been waiting more than one year (a) by county and (b) by district in Berkshire;

(2) what is the expected date by which the last of the new properties that have been waiting more than a year for their banding will have been banded (a) by county and (b) by district in Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The local office structure of the Valuation Office Agency is not based on county boundaries and the information for each county is not held centrally. Of the dwellings to be added to valuation lists in the county and district areas of Berkshire, as at 28 October, the following percentage had been outstanding for more than a year:-

	per cent.
Berkshire	12·4
Bracknell Forest	3·4
Newbury	21·1
Reading	6·5
Slough	2·5
Windsor and Maidenhead	4·0
Wokingham	18·9

The Valuation Office Agency at Reading expects to have these dwellings entered in valuation lists before the end of November this year.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of council tax banding appeals made (a) by county and (b) by district in Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The local office structure of the Valuation Office Agency is not based on county boundaries and the information requested at (a) is not held centrally.

The number of council tax banding appeals made, as at 28 October, in each district of Berkshire are as follows:

	Appeals
Berkshire	17,821
Bracknell Forest	1,756
Newbury	3,663
Reading	4,669

	Appeals

Windsor and Maidenhead	3,359
Wokingham	3,098

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tax banding appeals were heard by 30 September (a) by county and (b) by district in Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The local office structure of the Valuation Office Agency is not based on counties. The only centrally held statistics that provide figures for counties are those relating to appeals made during the initial period. The number of initial period council tax banding appeals settled by the end of September were as follows:

Scrap Yards

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends that the new controls envisaged in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 should be enforced in relation to scrap yards.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Pickthall) on 21 October 1994, Official Report, column 352.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to take action to prevent scrap yards from being a source of pollution.

Mr. Atkins: The recovery of scrap metal is subject to licensing under part I of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Waste regulation authorities have a duty under section 9 of the 1974 Act to ensure that licensed activities do not cause pollution of water, danger to public health or serious detriment to local amenities; and to ensure that licence conditions are complied with.

Home Improvement Agency

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusion he has reached in his review of the Home Improvement Agency grant programme.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached following his review of the Home Improvement Agency grant programme.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The review has confirmed that home improvement agencies provide an important service helping a large and increasing number of vulnerable people improve their homes. Their work is highly valued by both clients and practitioners, especially local authorities, and makes a significant contribution to the effective delivery of housing and community care policies.

We have therefore concluded that the grant programme should continue for a further five years from 1 April 1995. We are now considering the detailed arrangements under which the programme will operate in the light of suggestions made by consultees.

I am placing in the Library a report of the studies which informed the review, together with a list of the responses received to the consultation letter issued by my Department in June. Copies of individual responses may be obtained through the Library.

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish a management statement on relations between his Department and the Rural Development Commission.

Mr. Atkins: I am issuing the management statement today. Copies are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1994–95.

Mr. Gummer: The Department of the Environment/regeneration initiative non-voted cash limit will be increased by £25,081,000 from £1,267,772,000 to £1,292,853,000. Capital end-year flexibility take-up of £28,288,000 will fund payments on capital projects which slipped from previous years for the Victoria arena, Urban Regeneration Agency, housing action trusts, Plymouth development corporation, Central Manchester development corporation, city challenge and the coalfield areas fund. A transfer of £3,000,000 to class VII, vote 1—housing, England,—is necessary to meet an equivalent increase in city challenge Housing Corporation expenditure and a transfer of £207,000 to the Department of Health is necessary for urban programme payments. There will be associated increases to external financing limits as follows: by £3,000,000 from £5,800,000 to £8,800,000 for Central Manchester development corporation; by £1,000,000 from £30,500,000 to £31,500,000 for Tyne and Wear development corporation; by £1,639,000 from £6,500,000 to £8,139,000 for Plymouth development corporation; by £2,500,000 from £88,215,000 to £90,715,000 for the housing action trusts; and by £21,470,000 from £95,336,000 to £116,806,000 for the Urban Regeneration Agency—English Partnerships.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 5—central environmental services, etc—will be reduced by £1,309,000 from £440,954,000 to £439,645,000 to reflect savings in grant in aid paid to the Rural Development Commission and expenditure forecast under various subheads.

The cash limit for class VII, vote 8—revenue support grant, payments of non-domestic rates, Valuation Office services, etc., England—will be increased by £2,166,000 from £29,632,166,000 to £29,634,332,000. This comprises an increase of £3,452,000 in provision for Valuation Office rating services repayment, an increase of £214,000 in provision for Valuation Office banding and valuation services, and an offsetting reduction of £1,500,000 in provision for valuation tribunals.

The Department of the Environment/local government reorganisation etc. cash limit will be reduced by £3,800,000 from £58,000,000 to £54,200,000. This comprises a reduction of £1,000,000 in provision for supplementary credit approvals to local authorities in respect of commutation of loan charge grants, and a reduction of £2,800,000 in borrowing provision for the local government residuary body.

All increases will be offset by savings or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Coal Industry

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what amendments he proposes to make to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order following coal privatisation; and what guidance he proposes to issue.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Town and Country Planning General Development Order (Amendment No. 2) Order 1994 which comes into operation on 31 October provides for permitted development rights for licensees of the Coal Authority to continue underground mining at GDO mines subject to conditions requiring the restoration and aftercare of the pithead surface area. These require the operator to submit a scheme for the restoration and aftercare of the site for the Mineral Planning Authority's approval.

There are also a number of minor technical amendments needed to the GDO, broadly to change references to British Coal to the Coal Authority and to update definitions in line with the Coal Industry Act, 1994.

The guidance note that we have published today explains the effect of the changes introduced by the amendment order and gives advice on the preparation and content of restoration schemes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has made equivalent arrangements.

Recycling

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government intend to respond to the second report from the Environment Select Committee on recycling, HC (1993–94) 63.

Mr. Atkins: I am pleased to announce that our response to the Environment Select Committee's report on recycling is being published today; copies have been laid in the Journal Office.

The Government welcome the Environment Committee's wide-ranging and thoughtful report. The report comes at an opportune moment. A range of United Kingdom and international initiatives on waste management are currently being developed. These have the broad aim of securing a more sustainable approach to waste management and increased beneficial use of unavoidable wastes. The report will provide a focal point for informed debate of the many complex issues that need to be addressed.

The Government are particularly pleased to see the Environment Committee's recognition that recycling should not be pursued for its own sake. It must be seen as part of an integrated approach to waste management. We are also pleased to endorse the Committee's view of the waste management hierarchy as a decision-making tool which balances the environmental and economic considerations in each case. We announced in July that we intend to build upon these principles in the development of a waste strategy for England and Wales.

Recycling will have an important place in that strategy. In part, this is because recycling is the best option for many wastes—but also, as the Environment Committee point out in its report, because the expansion of recycling and increased opportunities for individual participation can be a springboard for wider environmental awareness and action.

Development Corporations

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each development corporation since it inception (a) its total budget, (b) the number of jobs created and (c) the role of private sector investment made in its area, with the jobs and investment broken down into (i) manufacturing, (ii) commercial, (iii) retailing, (iv) office and (v) other.

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The urban development corporations' programmes are supported by grant in aid, receipts from their activities and funds from the European Community. The table shows the total grant in aid paid to each corporation since its inception; the gross number of new permanent jobs; and the private sector investment in developments in the designated area. Where information is available, the figures for jobs and private sector investment have been broken down into; (i) manufacturing; (ii) commercial; (iii) retailing; (iv) office; and (v) other.

In five cases—Birmingham Heartlands, London Docklands, Sheffield, Teesside and Trafford Park—the employment figures vary from those previously published (Hansard 14 July 1994, Col. 771). The substantial downward revisions of the London Docklands and Teesside totals reflect the fact that the earlier numbers had been built up by combining total employment in the area in 1991 with gross jobs subsequently created.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what additional safety precautions would be required to permit the burying of low-level nuclear waste on landfill tips;

(2) if he will make a statement on the implications of water pollution at Beighton tip, Sheffield for the suitability of the tip for the burying of low-level nuclear waste.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 31 October 1994]: A small number of landfill sites, including Beighton tip, already receive some low-level radioactive waste for controlled burial. Authorisations for all such disposals are issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the terms of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. These are designed to ensure the safe disposal of this waste. Conditions in the authorisations are determined on a case by case basis depending on the nature of the sites and the activity and amount of the wastes.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to consult local communities in the vicinities of landfill tips which are being considered for the burying of low-level nuclear waste;

(2) if he will make it his policy that local communities are consulted before any nuclear waste is deposited in landfill tips.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 31 October 1994]: In addition to the specific requirements of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, it is already the practice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to consult the relevant waste regulatory authority, local councils, and water undertaker, before issuing authorisations for controlled burial of low-level radioactive waste at landfill sites. The Government are currently consulting on proposals to encourage greater use of controlled burial. However, there are no plans in relation to specific sites.

Ofwat

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to Ofwat of its contract with Ludgate Laud for parliamentary lobbying in the present year.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer, 31 October 1994]: This is a matter for the Director General of Water Services.

Economic Development Expenditure

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total spending on economic development measures by (a) the five west Yorkshire district councils, (b) the four south Yorkshire district councils, (c) North Yorkshire county council and (d) Humberside county council under the Housing and Local Government Act 1989 in each financial year since 1989–90.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 31 October 1994]: Section 33 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 allows local authorities to take "such steps as they may from time to time consider appropriate for promoting the economic development of their area". The Department of the Environment does not collect information about expenditure specifically related to section 33, although it does record a number of items of local authority expenditure which can be totalled to produce a figure for economic development generally. For each of the local authorities identified, this gives the following figures for net current and capital expenditure respectively:

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average weekly rent paid by people earning less than £10,000 in each year since 1990.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 25 October 1994, c. 531]: Estimates of the average rent paid by households in England headed by people with annual incomes less than £10,000 are as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for 1992–93 and 1993–94 the amount spent in each London borough, with totals for each training and enterprise council area, under each of the programmes now incorporated into the single regeneration budget, and the amount allocated to be spent in 1994–95 on the same basis.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 27 October 1994, Official Report, column 813.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is his policy regarding possible future exports of casings or components for anti-personnel mines with self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms;

(2) what is his policy regarding possible future exports of anti-personnel mines with self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms.

Mr. Ian Taylor: We have not produced or exported any anti-personnel mines for some years. Nevertheless, any applications to export these forms of mines or their components would be subject to rigorous scrutiny on a case by case basis, with due regard to proposed end users and their adherence to protocol II of the 1981 United Nations weaponry convention.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what failure rate is allowed in the definition of a self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanism on an anti-personnel mine employed by Her Majesty's Government for export purposes.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Applications for licences for the export of anti-personnel mines have not been received for some years and the United Kingdom does not currently produce or export such mines. Failure rate would not, however, be a factor taken into account in considering applications for licences to export such mines. We are working positively towards incorporating achievable criteria into the revised 1981 United Nations weaponry convention which governs the use of such weapons.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the definition of anti-personal mine employed by Her Majesty's Government for export purposes.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Exports of anti-personnel mines are controlled under munitions list 4 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 and our own recently announced export moratorium. Although currently no formal definition on anti-personnel mine is used, companies making applications for licences to export any weapons are required to state the purpose for which those weapons are to be used.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research he has carried out into the impact of production and export of anti-personnel mines with self-destruct or self-neutralising mechanisms by the United Kingdom on the production and export of anti-personnel mines of all types by developing countries; and what were his conclusions.

Mr. Ian Taylor: No such research has been undertaken by my Department.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to which countries the United Kingdom has exported casings or components for anti-personnel mines since 1982.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Details of any export licences approved for this equipment could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement o the value of savings identified by Stoy Hayward as obtainable if the work of the Insolvency Service is contracted out; and when details of the cost and savings will be published.

Mr. Heseltine: Stoy Hayward offer no quantified estimates of potential savings. Detailed information on the costs and the interest of private sector organisations provided to Stoy Hayward Consulting remains confidential.

Steel

Mr. John Morris: To ask the President of the board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect the recent decision of the European Commission in respect of steel will have on British Steel; and if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom steel industry.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I expect that the reported demise of the restructuring plan for the European steel industry will have little effect on British Steel, as it is simply an acknowledgement of what has been apparent for some time. The demise only reinforces the view of both the Government and the United Kingdom steel industry that the only way to achieve successful restructuring of the industry is by strict control of subsidies. The Commission should now be free to devote more effort to achieving this.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the European Commission steel industry restructuring plans.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I was not surprised when the Commission recently announced that the restructuring plan for the European steel industry was dead. The demise of the plan reinforces the Government's view that the only way to achieve successful restructuring of the industry is by strict control of subsidies, so that the inefficient producers come under commercial pressure to make closures where necessary. The Commission should now be free to devote more effort to achieving this.

Parliamentary Consultancies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it a requirement for companies to disclose publicly the nature of any parliamentary consultancy they may enter into with an hon. Member and the remuneration.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Such consultancies are already subject to disclosure in the Register of Members' Interests. I have no plans to introduce new Companies Act requirements.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The 1994 figures are not yet available. "Public Bodies 1993" shows that, at 1 September 1993, 19 per cent. of the Department's appointments were held by women. The Department is fully committed to equal opportunities for women in public appointments, and has set itself a goal of increasing the number of women in DTI public appointments to 30 per cent. by 1996.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total number of submissions received in response to his public consultation on the nuclear review; how many of the submissions have now been placed in the Library; and what is the reason for not placing in the Library the submission of the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent.

Mr. Eggar: There have been 505 formal submissions to the nuclear review: 200 of these, from the nuclear industry and other representative bodies and organisations, have been treated as substantive and placed in the Libraries of both Houses in accordance with my announcement of 19 May, Official Report columns 545–46. This includes the submission from the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), and I understand that the Library will be writing to confirm this.

Optical Fibre Networks

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Her Majesty's Government will respond to the third report from the Trade and Industry Committee of Session 1993–94 on optical fibre networks, HC 285.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government will publish shortly a Command Paper setting out the opportunities for the United Kingdom arising from the further development of broadband communications networks and services. This Command Paper will incorporate the Government's response to the Trade and Industry Select Committee's report on optical fibre.

Information Super-highway

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what efforts his Department is making to ensure that the largest possible number of individuals and organisations are connected to the information super-highway.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government will publish shortly a Command Paper setting out the opportunities for the United Kingdom arising from the further development of broad-band communications networks and services.

Entertainment Services (BT and Mercury)

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to vary the ban on BT and Mercury providing entertainment services via their national networks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) on 22 June 1994, Official Report, column 227.

Coal Industry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what liability will pass to British Coal's successor in regard to the provision of superannuation cover in respect of those employees who accepted the British Coal contract of employment in 1994; and what provision has been made by British Coal to meet this obligation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Successor companies will be liable only for employers' contribution to the new industry-wide schemes that are to be established and—except where a transferring employee also elects to transfer his past service entitlements—only in respect of transferred employees' future service with the successors. There is full provision for transferred employees' entitlements in respect of past service with British Coal within the funds of the existing pension schemes, now subject to guarantee by Government.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes have been made to British Coal's external financing limit for 1994–95.

Mr. Eggar: The external financing limit of the British Coal Corporation has been increased from £700 million to £736 million. This is attributable to a variety of factors including the effect on cash flow of privatising British Coal's mining business.

Indonesia

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance is being provided towards the contracts recently entered into between Trafalgar house, PowerGen and British Gas with companies in Indonesia, the subject matter of the contracts, their total value and the identity of the Indonesian company in those contracts which involve a joint enterprise.

Mr. Needham: The DTI has awarded to Trafalgar house and a subsidiary company two grants under the overseas projects fund. These were to assist with a feasibility study and precontractual activities in Indonesia. Details of these grants are commercially confidential. Where appropriate, in accordance with the scheme rules, grants are repaid.

In addition, in 1988, Her Majesty's Government offered aid funds under the aid and trade provision of £16·856 million in support of a bid by Trafalgar house to build a toll road between Cikampek and Padalarang at an estimated cost of £56 million. The final value of the contract is subject to ongoing negotiations. The Indonesian partner company is PT Jasa Marga (Persero).

No financial assistance has been made available to PowerGen or British Gas.

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which business people representing which companies were involved in the recent trade mission to Indonesia.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date he expects to announce details of schemes that have been successful under the third non-fossil fuel obligation order.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My Department is currently assessing the cost and quality of the bids received, and carrying out the statutory and other consultations. I hope to be able to announce the order in early December.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to his Department's cash limits and running costs limit for 1994–95.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class IV, vote 1—support for business, consumer and investor protection, energy programmes and administration—will be increased by £12,525,000 from £1,173,077,000 to £1,185,602,000.

The gross running costs limit for the Department of Trade and Industry is being increased by £14,217,000 from £328,000,000 to £342,217,000. This change comprises the take-up of £14,549,000 in running costs end-year flexibility as approved by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July, Official Report, columns 729-34, and the transfer from Her Majesty's Treasury, class XVII, vote 1, of £3,000, offset by machinery of government transfers to the Department of Transport, class VI, vote 2, of £110,000, Office of the Rail Regulator, class VI, vote 8, of £197,000 and Oftel, class IV, vote 10, of £28,000.

There are some other changes in the allocation of provision. These include a reduction in provision of £1,500,000 on support for business reflecting a forecast underspend and a new provision of £1,795,000 on privatisation and contractorisation of DTI laboratories, the balance being made up by a transfer of £295,000 from other services. They also include the transfer of £740,000 to the Scottish Office and £1,194,000 to the Welsh Office in respect of industrial programmes.

In addition, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 4, privatisation of the coal industry, will be increased by £3,402,000 from £12,495,000 to £15,897,000. The increase covers additional costs of privatisation advisers' fees.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to the cash limits and running costs limits for the Office of Electricity Regulation, Office of Gas Supply and Office of Telecommunications.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for class IV, vote 10, Office of Telecommunications will be increased by £299,000 from £9,059,000 to £9,358,000 and the gross running costs limit by £299,000 from £8,627,000 to £8,926,000. The increase includes the take-up of running costs end-year flexibility of £171,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–34, and increased provision for personnel services. The increase will be offset by transfers from the Department of Trade and Industry, class IV, vote 1, £28,000, and Office of Electricity Regulation, class IV, vote 12, £100,000.

The cash limit for class IV, vote 11, Office and Gas supply, will be increased by £100,000 from £4,424,000 to £4,524,000. The increase is required for refitting and equipping new offices. The increase will be offset by a transfer from the Office of Electricity Regulation, class IV, vote 12, £100,000.

As a consequence of the above, the cash limit for class IV, vote 12, Office of Electricity Regulation, class IV, vote 12, will be reduced by £200,000 from £10,871,000 to £10,671,000. The gross running costs limit will be reduced by £200,[illegible] from £11,603,000 to £11,403,000.

These changes are offsetting or charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Iraq

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect in percentage terms in the amount of trade with Iraq following from business visits of Iraqi business men since February 1993.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1994]: None. Exports of foodstuffs, medicines and humanitarian goods to Iraq in 1993 totalled £12 million. For the first nine months of this year they were about £7·5 million. There have been no imports from Iraq in either year.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the guidelines companies receive when applying for export licences for trade with Iraq.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 31 October 1994]: No written guidelines are issued to companies about exports to Iraq from the United Kingdom, but each proposed export to Iraq is dealt with individually by the Department's sanctions unit.

All exports to Iraq from the United Kingdom require authorisation from the United Nations Sanctions Committee and an export licence from the DTI. Companies must therefore complete a form provided by the United Nations Sanctions Committee giving details for their proposed exports. The form is sent out to any company who intends to export goods and any query that it may have can be discussed with the sanctions unit.

Turkey

Mr. Tipping: To ask the president of the Board of Trade if he will list the dates of each ministerial visit or trade mission to Turkey since April 1992.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to import radioactively contaminated nitric acid from the former nuclear reprocessing plant at Hanford, USA; and what representations his Department has received from staff at the British embassy in Washington on the subject.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 31 october 1994]: None. The import of nitric acid is a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc, subject to meeting appropriate import licensing and regulatory requirements. The British embassy, as part of its policy to support British companies pursuing commercial opportunities, and with the agreement of my Department, wrote to the United States Department of Energy in August 1994 in support of BNFL's commercial activities, including this proposal.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent action has been taken by Britain and the European Union to address the humanitarian needs of the people in Liberia and refugees therefrom.

Mr. Baldry: Since 1 January, Britain has provided £1·25 million and the European Union approximately £5 million in support of the United Nations and non-governmental organisations emergency relief programmes to those displaced inside Liberia and to refugees in neighbouring states, the United Kingdom share of the EU aid is £0·6 million.

The Gambia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about British and European policy towards The Gambia following the recent coup.

Mr. Baldry: We and our European partners have condemned the overthrow of the democratically elected government of The Gambia. We have made it clear that the four-year election timetable announced by the armed forces provisional ruling council is wholly unsatisfactory. Together with our EU partners, Britain announced on 12 October that it was suspending all military co-operation and balance of payments support and would review new aid projects on a case-by-case basis.

Copies of United Kingdom and European Union statements on The Gambia have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Somaliland

Mr. Worthington: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in improving relationships between UNOSOM and Somaliland in adding to the infrastructure of Somaliland.

Mr. Baldry: UNOSOM closed its office in Hargeisa on 21 August. We understand that the United Nations Development Office will visit north-west Somalia in the near future to take forward the process of planning rehabilitation and reconstruction assistance.

Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the humanitarian needs of Kenya; and what is being done by Britain and the European Union in this connection.

Mr. Baldry: Harvest prospects are good in most areas. The world food programme will continue to deliver food aid until the end of the year to meet localised needs especially in northern and eastern regions.

The United Kingdom has contributed over £6 million in bilateral humanitarian aid since January 1994. European Union emergency aid commitments for 1994 amount to £7·35 million, of which the United Kingdom share is £0·92 million.

Overseas Aid

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the figures, the sources of the figures and the definition of "poorest" which formed the basis of his statement of 24 October, Official Report, column 680, in respect of the focus of bilateral aid.

Mr. Baldry: In 1992–93, £619 million was spent on aid to the poorest countries. This represents 80 per cent. of United Kingdom bilateral aid to developing countries which is allocable by income group.

This information is published in table A2 of "British Aid Statistics 1988–89 to 1992–93", a copy of which is available in the Libraries of the House.

"The poorest countries" are defined as low income group countries with a GNP per capita in 1991 of below $765.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to make a direct comparative assessment of how well British overseas aid expenditure is spent through (a) the United Kingdom bilateral programme and (b) multilateral agencies.

Mr. Baldry: We attach equal importance to the effectiveness of all projects whether in bilateral or multilateral programmes. A sample of projects financed under the bilateral programme are assessed to determine their effectiveness and the lessons are fed back into the design of future projects. Our approach towards improving the effectiveness of multilateral aid is set out in the speech which my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development gave to the Overseas Development Institute on 14 June 1994, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: On three such occasions since 1 January 1994, a Minister has been accompanied by his spouse travelling at public expense. The total cost to public funds was £4,197.68. On no occasion has such travel been undertaken at own cost.

University Students

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students from Northern Ireland who gained university entrance, enrolled in universities in Great Britain during the last academic year; and how many went to each university in Great Britain.

Mr. Ancram: Information is not available in the form requested. However, a total of 4,207 students from Northern Ireland entered higher education courses in Great Britain in the 1993–94 academic year.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Asthma

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how much money the Medical Research Council spent in 1993–94 on (a) research into asthma and (b) research which may be relevant to the condition;

(2) how much money the Medical Research Council plans to spend in the current year and in 1995–96 on (a) research into asthma and (b) research which may be relevant to the condition.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: In the financial year 1993–94, the Medical Research Council's expenditure on research projects directly related to asthma was £0·9 million. Further spending on research which may be relevant to the condition totalled almost £1·1 million. The decision on funding for asthma research in the current year and in 1995–96 rests with the MRC. It will depend, as with all other research areas, on the quality of the research proposals that the Council receives. The MRC is, of course, willing to consider soundly based proposals in competition with other applications for council support, and funding decisions are dependent upon a peer review process.

On 3 October, MRC and the Departments of Health and of the Environment issued a combined call for research proposals on the links between air pollution and respiratory disease, with a special emphasis on asthma. Up to £5 million has been allocated to support this programme over the next four to five years.

TRANSPORT

Road Repairs

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to co-ordinate road repairs and the digging up of highways by public utilities, to minimise disruption to local communities.

Mr. Norris: Under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, co-ordination on publicly maintained local roads, the vast majority, is the responsibility of the local highway authority. For trunk roads and motorways the responsibility rests with the Highways Agency which, through its agents, works to the requirements of the Act. A code of practice has been issued under the Act, giving practical guidance on the co-ordination of street works and works for road purposes and related matters.

Seat Belts

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) of 19 July, Official Report, columns 81–82, what progress he has made in establishing a timetable for the compulsory fitting of seat belts on all new minibuses and coaches.

Mr. Norris: We have pressed the Commission on this issue. Work is under way on revised technical proposals on the basis of which we expect the Commission to make a formal proposal for a directive early next year.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the relative merits of lap and three-point seat belts in minibuses and coaches.

Mr. Norris: An assessment of the relative merits of lap and three-point belts is contained in the review of the technical and cost implications of the fitment of seat belts in minibuses and coaches, which was published on 19 July. A copy of that report was placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he is taking to encourage manufacturers of minibuses and coaches, and owners of currently operational minibuses and coaches to fit seat belts to vehicles.

Mr. Norris: The major minibus manufacturers are already fitting seat belts to all seats in their new vehicles as standard equipment.

We take every available opportunity to encourage coach and minibus manufacturers and operators to fit belts in both new and, where practicable, existing vehicles.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list, for each executive agency in his Department, the number of sick days taken in the past 12 months broken down by grade and gender;

(2) if he will list the number of sick days taken during the last 12 months by staff of the Driving Standards Agency, broken down by grade and gender.

Mr. Norris: I am placing copies of tables containing the figures in the Libraries.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for each executive agency within his Department, the number of staff who have died while in employment in each of the last three financial years broken down by a grade and gender.

Mr. Norris: The figures requested are given in the following table:

London Buses

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the application of the expected receipts from the privatisation of London Buses subsidiary companies.

Mr. Norris: Under arrangements agreed at the time of the unified budget, provision was made for London Transport to retain all proceeds up to £100 million and 25 per cent. of receipts above this level.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many (a) vehicle examiners and (b) traffic examiners were employed by his Department in each of the last six years;

(2) to what extent Vehicle Inspectorate and traffic and vehicle examiners undertake random roadside checks of vehicles;

(3) how many (a) vehicle examiners and (b) traffic examiners are employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate; and what are his projections for the numbers in the financial years 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate. The chief executive has written to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs Gwyneth Dundwoody, dated 31 October 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about vehicle and traffic examiner staffing, and roadside enforcement checks.

i. Vehicle and Traffic Examiner staffing

Annex 1 updates the tables I sent to you on 18 July. These show the current staff in post figures. The information does not distinguish between operational and non operational staff so cannot be used [illegible] determine average man years spent on testing, and on roadworthiness and traffic enforcement.

Annex 2 is an analysis of average staffing by grade spent on vehicle testing and roadside enforcement activities. This information has been extracted from the Inspectorate's management accounts for the years 1988/89–1993/94.

The Inspectorate is planning efficiency savings of 20 per cent. by April 1996. Total staffing across the Inspectorate will fall by 470 from an average staffing figure of 1,758 in 1994/95. Most of these losses will come from natural wastage and voluntary redundancy. Unfortunately it is too early to determine staffing levels in the operational divisions, but we intend to make up for staff reductions by improved efficiency, greater use of information technology, more automation in vehicle testing work and better targeting of roadside enforcement.

ii. Roadside Enforcement

The Inspectorate targets the majority of its work. Whilst we try to examine at least some vehicles from all operators, we also try to concentrate activities on those most likely to be operating illegally.

In 1993–94, the last full year for which the information is available, vehicle examiners spent a total of 60·89 man years on roadside vehicle checks. VI testing staff carried out an additional 3·93 man years in clearing prohibitions issued by our vehicle examiners.

VI staff spent 64·88 man years on traffic enforcement checks at the roadside plus an additional 5·7 man years at ports.

I hope the above information is adequate, but if you would like to discuss the issues in more detail please contact Mrs. Jean Frary on 0117 9543211 who will arrange a convenient appointment.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 24 October, Official Report, column 398, what plans he has for a press campaign to promote the smoky vehicle hotline.

Mr. Norris: The number of hotline calls received has significantly increased since the leaflet explaining the reporting procedure has been included in vehicle excise licence renewal notices.

I am confident that the recent announcements by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State about targeted emissions enforcement checks will help further increase public awareness.

We will review the need for further press announcements in due course.

M25

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the timetable for his review of proposed M25 link roads and for an announcement on whether he plans to abandon or push ahead with the scheme.

Mr. Watts: It was announced earlier this year that the next stage for the scheme for link roads between junctions 12 and 15 of the M25 would be a public inquiry. A date for the inquiry was not fixed. That remains the position. A further announcement will be made in due course.

Airport Facilities

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce a decision on the location of a new runway in south-east England.

Mr. Norris: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 18 July 1994, Official Report, column 69.

Rail Safety

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that the safety and convenience of the travelling public take precedence over the Government's timetable for the successive stages of railway privatisation.

Mr. Watts: Safety is paramount.

Red Routes

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to implement all existing decisions to designate red routes in London; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Implementation of red route measures will begin later this year. The total cost of implementation is estimated to be £100 million at 1991–92 prices.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running costs limits; and what proposals there are to change the cash limit and running costs limit of the Office of the Rail Regulator for 1994–95.

Dr. Mawhinney: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made:

(i) the cash limit for class VI, vote 1 (highways agency) will be increased by £44,131,000 from £2,098,528,000 to £2,142,659,000. The increase in the cash limit includes the take up of end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994 (Offical Report, columns 729–734) and subsequently adjusted; and, adjustments in funding relating to the formation of the Highways Agency between this vote and class VI, vote 2 and class VI, vote 5.

(ii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 2 (administration and transport services) will be increased by £15,620,000 from £235,425,000 to £251,045,000. The additional provision includes the take up of end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994 (Official Report, columns 729–734); the transfer of funds from the Department of Trade and Industry (class IV, vote 1) in respect of the London Regional Passengers Committee; the transfer of funds for research and development from class VI, vote 1 and class VI, vote 5; the transfer to class VI, vote 1 of various items of running costs and administrative capital; and, the transfer of provision to class VI, vote 7 to cover professional advisers' fees.

(iii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 5 (local roads and transport) will be increased by £59,669,000 from £532,904,000 to £592,573,000. The increase includes the take up of end year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994 (Official Report, columns 729–734); various transfers of funds between this vote and class VI, vote 1, class VI, vote 2 and from non-voted expenditure; and, the increase of provision for special grants to passenger transport authorities.

(iv) the cash limit for class VI, vote 7 (passenger rail services) will be increased by £63,000,000 by transfers from class VI, vote 2, class VI, vote 3 and from non-voted expenditure from £1,684,500,000 to £1,747,500,000. The additional provision is required for sums due to British Railways Board in respect of public service obligations and for the costs of professional advisers' fees in connection with the Franchising Director's duties to designate railway passenger services as eligible for provision under franchise agreements.

(v) the cash limit for class VI, vote 8 (office of the rail regulator) will be increased by £1,255,000 from £6,457,000 to £7,712,000. The increased cash limit includes the take up of end year flexibility entitlement of £1,058,000 as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994 (Official Report, columns 729–734) and a transfer of £197,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry (Class IV, vote 1) for accommodation costs of the rail users committees.

(vi) The Department of Transport Local Authority Capital cash limit has been increased by £6,000,000 from £291,358,000 to £297,358,000. This reflects the take up of end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994 (Official Report, columns 729–734).

(vii) The Department of Transport running costs limits has been reduced by £382,000 from £418,375,000 to £417,993,000 and the Office of the Rail Regulator running costs limit has been increased by £197,000 from £5,973,000 to £6,170,000.

The overall increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure. In particular, there are a number of adjustments between the voted and non-voted elements of railway expenditure which do not affect the control total.

Hilton Hotel (Dinner-dance)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any Minister from his Department attended a dinner-dance at the Hilton hotel, Park lane on 14 July 1993.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 31 October 1994]: My hon. Friend the member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) attended the function in a private capacity.

Security Guards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new proposals he has to ensure that those convicted of acts of violence are not employed by his Department or their contractors as security guards.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 31 October 1994]: Contract documents require contractors to obtain tenders for site security services from a list of named, reputable, security firms.

They require the security company to demonstrate its ability to select guards in terms of aptitude and temperament for the job, and that security guards be restrained, self disciplined and trained for dealing with peaceful protestors as well as those intent on causing damage.

As for security guards employed by the Department, any checks for criminal records are made in accordance with our stated vetting policy and decisions on whether to employ are taken with due regard to the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974.

British Rail (Land)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much land, in hectares, was owned by British Rail in Scotland before the present restructuring.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 28 October 1994]: British Rail owned some 6,475 hectares of land in Scotland as at 31 March 1994. This figure excludes closed branch lines totalling about 134 miles in length.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Norris: Detailed information on past and present appointees to non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs formerly known as quasi autonomous non-governmental organisations—is not held in the Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, from such limited information as is available on present members of NDPBs, there is no evidence that any of them is a former hon. Member, apart from one member of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee, Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones, who was a Labour Member of Parliament. He was reappointed as a member of the committee in December 1992 for a three-year period. Committee members are not paid a salary but the Department meets their travel and subsistence costs.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Lady to "Public Bodies 1993".

Pollution

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many calls the telephone line for reporting vehicles which are polluting excessively has received; how the line is promoted; at what annual cost; and if he will publish a list of action taken as a result of calls made.

Mr. Norris: The Vehicle Inspectorate received almost 3,000 calls between April 1993 and March 1994. The cost of dealing with those calls was in the region of £5,500.

The procedure for reporting vehicles was publicised in a leaflet published in August 1993. This was sent to local authorities, motoring organisations, environmental groups, libraries, citizens' advice bureaux and other interested bodies. I have recently placed copies in the Library in response to a question from the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey). Since February 1994, the reporting procedure has also been explained in one of the small leaflets included with all vehicle excise licence renewal notices.

Operators who have been reported are asked to have their vehicle checked and are warned that continued use of an excessively smoky vehicle could be in contravention of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986.

Ferry Safety

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report from the chief coastguard south-west on the ferry safety exercise that took place on 4 November 1993 on the Quiberon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the Coastguard Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. David Jamieson, dated 1 November 1994:

The Secretary of the State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as the Question deals with an operational matter, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

An extensive post exercise discussion was held for all the participants shortly after the exercise and a draft report for the Exercise "EDDYSTONE 93" was circulated in September 1994. A final report will be distributed early in November. Exercise reports deal with operational matters and are not usually submitted to Ministers.

Air Training College

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the decision of the Civil Aviation Authority to withdraw approvals to train air traffic controllers from the South East Kent college of air training.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on Monday 31 October.

Rail Safety

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which organisation has responsibility under the new structure of the railway industry for ensuring that passengers are kept fully informed about the causes of the delays resulting from serious operating incidents; what arrangements exist to ensure that train operating companies have access to the necessary information; and what steps his Department has taken to monitor the policy followed by Railtrack and train operating companies concerning the accuracy and completeness of information supplied to passengers in such circumstances.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack is required to inform the relevant train operating companies of any incidents. Train operating companies are responsible for informing passengers about delays resulting from serious operating incidents. They work to citizens charter guidelines as laid down in British Rail's passengers charter.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the near collision on the evening of Thursday 20 October involving two passenger trains outside Tunbridge Wells station; what features this incident had in common with the fatal accident at Cowden, Kent on 15 October; how both trains came to be on the same section of track travelling in opposite directions; how close the trains came to colliding and how a collision was averted; what information was given at the time to passengers about the reasons for the resulting delay to services; what telecommunications equipment was available to the relevant signalman and drivers of the two trains; what steps have been taken to ascertain responsibility for the incident; and whether action has been taken against any individual.

Mr. Watts: I understand from the Health and Safety Executive that because of a points failure the signalman had appointed hand signalmen at each end of the short single line through Strawberry Hill tunnel, to hand-wind the points according to instructions from the signalman. An error then occurred which led to the 18.45 Charing Cross to Hastings train running on to the northbound line which was occupied by the 17.40 Hastings to Charing Cross train, and which was standing at a red signal.

The driver of the southbound train was proceeding with caution as instructed, and was thus able to see the points were wrongly set and bring his train to a standstill, 50 yards from the other train.

There were no injuries to passengers or staff, but both drivers were treated for shock.

The circumstances of this incident have nothing in common with the Cowden accident.

I understand that on this line there are telephones on signals which link to signal boxes and these were used as the means of communication between the signalman and the hand-signalmen on site.

I understand that information about services was made available through radio, ceefax and announcements at stations.

Railtrack is carrying out an investigation into the cause of the incident and will then decide what further action is necessary.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the demands on the time of railway managers imposed by the current reorganisation of the railway industry; and what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that these are consistent with the unimpaired discharge of their responsibility for operating the network and for maintaining safety and that the conditions of employment of employees of British Rail and Railtrack provide facilities for the making public of fears about safety matters.

Mr. Watts: Safety is paramount in all railway operations.

I am satisfied that the arrangements in place will ensure that the appropriate levels of safety are maintained. The new safety regulations are being monitored and enforced by the Health and Safety Executive.

Conditions of employment are matters for British Rail and Railtrack.

Cyclists

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve adherence to the highway code on the part of cyclists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Cyclists are required by law to comply with traffic directions and signals. This requirement is in the interests of cyclists' own safety and that of other road users. The Road Traffic Act 1991 created the offence of dangerous cycling. The maximum fine is now £2,500 for dangerous cycling and £1,000 for careless cycling. Enforcement of the law is a matter for the police.

Blue Circle and Decision Makers Ltd.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates representatives of Blue Circle and Decision Makers Ltd. met the right hon. Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor) in his capacity as Secretary of State for Transport to discuss a proposed international passenger station at Ebbsfleet

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 31 October 1994]: My right hon. Friend had no official meetings organised by the Department with Blue Circle or Decision Makers Ltd.

Austrian Tunnelling Method

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which (a) current and (b) planned transport schemes, and at which locations, the new Austrian tunnelling method may be used (i) currently and (ii) in the future.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The information is as follows:

(a) Current transport schemes

Two sections of the Jubilee Line Extension, at Jubilee gardens and London Bridge Station, are currently being constructed using the new austrian tunnelling method, although this work is currently suspended pending further information on the Heathrow collapse.

(b) Planned transport schemes

Plans for the crossrail project include the use of NATM techniques for station tunnels at platform levels at Bond Street, Tottenham Court Road, Farringdon and Liverpool Street stations and at part of Paddington station. One additional section of the JLE using NATM is planned between London Bridge and Waterloo.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Livestock Transportation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has held with hauliers regarding the movement of small livestock; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: Officials have held one meeting with representatives of the pet industry and organisations with an interest in the transport of small livestock together with a representative of the parcel-carrying firm which recently announced its intention to stop carrying small consignments of poultry or rabbits.

The trade interests agreed to hold further discussions with the carrier with a view to developing suitable containers for the carriage of these types of animal. These would need to make food and water available during journeys of more than 12 hours duration as required by the Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992.

Sheep Exports

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when it is expected that the vessels recently applying for licence to export sheep will be licensed by the Ministry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The Department's responsibility is to ensure that the arrangements for transporting farm animals are in accordance with the legal requirements laid down to protect their welfare.

We have considered a number of proposals that have been made to transport sheep and calves to the continent by ro-ro ferry from various south and east coast ports. No firm plans have yet been advanced for regular services, but a proposal to ship a single consignment of sheep in a fitted livestock vessel from Grimsby to Calais is likely to proceed, subject to inspection of the vessel and loading of the sheep under official supervision.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to secure a continuation of the EU moratorium on the use of BST beyond the end of 1994.

Mrs. Browning: The Government have made clear their view that any final decision on the licensing of BST should be based firmly on scientific principles, taking into account the need to avoid international trading problems, to encourage Community-based research industries and to maintain the competitiveness of the Community's agriculture and food industries. It should be for the marketplace to determine whether BST has a role to play and it is inappropriate to introduce new criteria to the licensing process. Other member states are fully aware of our views.

We await the report from the Commission on the experience of BST use in the United States where it has been on sale since 4 February 1994. It will also cover the implications for GATT and other trading relationships of a long-term prohibition. Its conclusions will be taken into account, along with the results of the formal consultation on BST carried out earlier this year, together with the representations which we continue to receive on this subject when we come to decide on the approach that the United Kingdom should take on the proposed extension of the EC moratorium later this year.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the privatisation which his Department has promoted since 1979, showing in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Waldegrave: The status of the former agricultural training board was changed on 29 March 1994 from that of a statutory, controlled non-departmental public body to a non-statutory private sector organisation with charitable status. The new organisation is known as ATB-Landbase Ltd. No proceeds accrued to the Government on privatisation. The company is now managed by a board of trustees. No information is available as to the estimated current value of the company.

The commercial artificial insemination service, formerly carried out by the Cattle Breeding Centre was transferred to the private sector in two parts in 1990. Financial details of those sales were not made public; because of subsequent reorganisation and deregulation in those sectors it is not possible to estimate the current value of those businesses.

Paralytic Shellfish Poisoning

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out by his Department, and what evidence he has on what paralytic shellfish poisoning is caused by naturally occurring algal blooms.

Mr. Jack: Paralytic shellfish poisoning in humans is caused by the consumption of shellfish contaminated by naturally occurring biotoxins. At present, we know that shellfish can become toxic by ingesting potentially toxic algae species. However, the correlation between algal blooms and PSP contamination of shellfish is not yet clear. A bloom in the water may be symptomatic of PSP toxin; but some blooms are not toxic, and toxin may be present where there are no blooms or other recognisable symptoms. We cannot therefore rely upon the presence of blooms as an indicator and carry out a surveillance programme of sampling and testing of PSP toxin.

The Government are funding an extensive research programme into the nature and causes of PSP and also into improved methods of detection. The results are published in the scientific literature and elsewhere. In addition, the results of the surveillance programme are published.

Infant Formulae

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the European Community directive on the marketing of infant formulae was not implemented by the Government in June; and when the statutory-instrument will be made.

Mrs. Browning: Consideration of the many points made during the consultation has delayed the implementation of European Community directives 91/321 and 92/52. It is hoped to make and lay the regulations shortly.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorell) to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 387.

Cash Limits

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed in his Department's cash limits for 1994–95

Mr. Waldegrave: The Intervention Board executive agency is eligible for an increase of £1,012,000 in respect of the end year flexibility arrangements for running costs expenditure, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–34. At this stage, it is proposed to take up £600,000 of this entitlement to increase the agency's running costs cash limit for class III vote 2 from £32,852,000 to £33,452,000. The increase will be wholly offset by a £600,000 reduction in payments for agents' services, subhead A3, to £16,848,000 and the increase will not therefore result in a change in the cash limit for the vote.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class III, vote 5—Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food: Departmental Research, Advisory Services and Administration—will be increased by £6,392,000 from £311,890,000 to £318,282,000 and the cash limit for class III, vote 4—Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food: agricultural, food and fishing services—will be increased by £1,212,000 from £371,418,000 to £372,630,000. The vote 5 supplementary estimate will give effect to the £7,329,000 running costs and £358,000 capital end year entitlement announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–34.

The gross running costs limit of the Department will be increased by £6,305,000 from £238,060,000 to £289,365,000. The £7,329,000 end year flexibility take-up has been offset by running costs reductions of £1,024,000. Those reductions comprise transfers of £842,000 vote 4 and £25,000 to the Welsh Office for commissioning work with the Central Science Laboratory on the bee health programme; a £36,000 transfer to the Central Statistical Office conferring responsibility for the compilation of the food and feed component of the producer price index; a £44,000 transfer to the Welsh Office to meet redundancy costs of agricultural advisory staff at the Welsh Office and a £77,000 transfer to vote 4 for commissioning work with the Veterinary Medicines Directorate in respect of food science.

The cost of the increase on vote 4 is fully matched by receipts in class III, vote 5 and a transfer from class XII, Vote 3. Within the revised limit, expenditure on support for the fishing industry will be increased by £1,500,000, grants for alternative land uses will be increased by £30,000 and expenditure on agricultural and food services will be increased by £1,212,000. The overall increase will be offset by additional receipts from sales of stocks of £1,530,000.

All increases will be offset by increased receipts, transfers on charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Fox Fur Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to require fox fur farms to be licensed;

(2) what proposals he has received from the Farm Animal Welfare Council for the licensing of fox fur farms;

(3) when he last met Respect for Animals; and what proposals it recommends for the licensing of fox fur farms.

Mrs. Browning: Respect for Animals met my predecessor in February this year and provided him with a report prepared by Mr. Robert Golding which reviewed the legislation relating to the keeping of mink and Arctic fox. The Farm Animal Welfare Council last week gave me, as requested, its views on Mr. Golding's report. I am asking officials to distribute the advice to interested organisations so that they can make comments which can be taken into account before we form a view.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the terms "treason", "secession", "sedition" and "subversion" against the Central People's Government of China contained in article 23 of the Basic Law covering the administration of Hong Kong after 1997;

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications of the word "turmoil" as used in article 18 of the Chinese Government's Basic Law on Hong Kong, which permits Beijing to extend Chinese national laws to Hong Kong in certain circumstances;

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of article 158 of the Basic Law of the People's Republic of China on the administration of Hong Kong after 1997 on the relationship of Hong Kong courts to the National People's Congress.

Mr. Goodlad: Freedom and the rule of law in Hong Kong after 30 June 1997 are enshrined in the Sino-British Joint Declaration, an international treaty registered at the United Nations. The United Kingdom and China are obliged to implement the Joint Declaration in good faith. The Basic Law is a law adopted by the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China. Generally, under article 158 of the Law after 30 June 1997 it will be for the courts of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region to interpret the Basic Law, save in certain limited circumstances where interpretation would be for the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Hong Kong regarding an Access to Information Bill; and what response he has made.

Mr. Goodlad: The hon. Christine Loh, an appointed member of the Hong Kong Legislative Council, has prepared a draft Access to Information Bill. The Hong Kong Government have decided that an administrative code of practice is the best way to improve public access to information in Hong Kong. A pilot scheme will test the code early in 1995. The Hong Kong Government expect to implement the code in full by the end of 1996.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which provision of the Hong Kong police force ordinance permits the seizure of news footage of demonstrators from television stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Section 50(7) of the police force ordinance provides for the seizure of news footage of demonstrations from television stations where there is reasonable cause to suspect that the footage may provide information about a person liable to arrest. A magistrate may empower any police officer by warrant to seize such news footage if he has satisfied himself that the request for the warrant is reasonable.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will grant Radio Television Hong Kong a formal charter setting out basic editorial safeguards.

Mr. Goodlad: Radio Television Hong Kong—RTHK—has always enjoyed full editorial independence. The Hong Kong Government are considering plans to enact legislation to corporatise RTHK. This would formalise the role of RTHK and set out basic editorial safeguards. The Sino-British Joint Declaration guarantees the freedom of press in Hong Kong after 30 June 1997.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to amend Hong Kong Broadcasting Authority Ordinance before 1997.

Mr. Goodlad: There are no plans at present to amend Hong Kong's Broadcasting Authority Ordinance. But the Hong Kong Government plans to amend the Television Ordinance as part of a rationalisation of Hong Kong's broadcasting legislation.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Government of China about article 23 of the Basic Law of the Hong Kong special administrative region of the People's Republic of China which prohibits after 1997 political organisations in Hong Kong from establishing ties with foreign political organisations or bodies.

Mr. Goodlad: Annex I, section XIII of the Sino-British Joint Declaration states that the Hong Kong special administrative region Government shall maintain the rights and freedoms as provided for by the laws previously in force in Hong Kong, including freedom of assembly, of association, of correspondence, of movement and of belief. The Joint Declaration is a solid foundation for Hong Kong's future freedoms in these areas.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will amend the Hong Kong film Censorship Ordinance to bring it in line with United Kingdom legislation.

Mr. Goodlad: The Hong Kong Government keep the Hong Kong Film Censorship Ordinance under review to ensure that it continues to reflect local needs and values. The ordinance was most recently amended in July 1993. The Hong Kong Government will propose further amendments in January 1995. It is not necessary or desirable to align film censorship legislation in Hong Kong precisely with that of the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs which provisions of the Hong Kong Summary Offences Ordinance permit prosecutions of people using a loudhailer without permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Section 4(29) of the Summary Offences Ordinance prohibits the use of loudhailers in public places without prior permission from the Commissioner of Police. There have been no prosecutions under this section for several years. Since the provisions under the Noise Control Ordinance are adequate for the prevention of nuisance, the Hong Kong Government plan to repeal section 4(29) of the Summary Offences Ordinance in the present session of the Legislative Council.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on setting up an independent human rights commission in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have received a number of representations, including a recommendation in the Foreign Affairs Committee's first report, "Relations between the United Kingdom and China in the period up to and beyond 1997" published on 23 March 1994. Our policy on this question remains as set out in the observations on the report laid before the House on 1 July.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many individuals in Hong Kong have been granted right of abode in the United Kingdom after 1997.

Mr. Goodlad: As at 22 October, 100,760 people in Hong Kong have obtained British citizenship, which confers the automatic right of abode in the United Kingdom, under the provisions of the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest published figures, ie those given in "Public Bodies 1993", show that as at 1 April 1993, 25 per cent. of public appointments made by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the Overseas Development Administration, were held by women. Figures for 1994 are being collected and will be announced in due course.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Goodlad: There are currently no former Members of Parliament who have been appointed by the FCO to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations.

As there are no centrally kept records, to answer the question in full would incur disproportionate cost.

Embassy Staff

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number and grade of staff at each embassy and high commission whose responsibilities lie primarily in promoting trade with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: The numbers and grades of United Kingdom based and locally engaged staff at Foreign and Commonwealth Office missions overseas whose responsibilities lie primarily in promoting trade with the United Kingdom are listed in the table.

There are, in addition, a large number of staff who contribute a lower proportion of their time to export promotion.

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present numbers, by nationality, of Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group forces in Liberia.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that he received from my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd) on 22 March, Official Report, column 142. Since then, Nigeria has reportedly reduced its presence. We have no further information.

Diplomatic Wing (Costs)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's diplomatic wing cash limits and running costs for 1994–95.

Mr. Baldry: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the following changes will be made.

The cash limit for class II, vote 2—other external relations—will be increased by £41,333,000 from £415,509,000 to £456,842,000, mainly to take account of United Nations peacekeeping operations and the repatriation of Vietnamese boat people. The increase is partly offset by appropriations in aid. The balance will be charged to the reserve.

The cash limit for class II, vote 3—external broadcasting and monitoring—will be increased by £2,749,000 from £171,509,000 to £174,258,000, in respect of the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement announced by my right hon. Friend the then Chief Secretary to the Treasury, the right hon. Member for Enfield, Southgate, (Mr. Portillo) on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–34.

The increases will be offset by increased receipts or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. There are no changes to running costs.

WALES

Forest Enterprise

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disposals of land have been completed by Forest Enterprise in the past 18 months.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: One hundred and forty-two.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many access agreements have been completed relating to disposals of forestry land by Forest Enterprise in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Twenty-two.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many parcels of forestry are currently being offered for sale by Forest Enterprise in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Thirty.

Parents Charter

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether copies of the parents charter have been distributed to schools in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The latest edition of "Education: A Charter for Parents in Wales" has been distributed to every home in Wales. Advance copies were sent to local education authorities, county chief executives, diocesan authorities, teacher organisations and other education organisations, and arrangements are in hand for schools to receive reference copies.

NHS Trust

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an up-to-date list of all the chairs and non-executive directors of each national health service trust board indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Richards: This information is contained in "Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales", which is updated quarterly and placed in the Library of the House.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: The most recent information about all appointments that I make is set out in "Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales, 1 September 1994", which is available in the Library of the House: 26·8 per cent. of these appointments are held by women.

Those figures include a number of appointments to bodies that are not shown in the Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies". The current edition, published in 1993, shows that, of the appointments made by Welsh Office Ministers and included in "Public Bodies", 17 per cent. were held by women in September 1993. Comparable figures for 1994 are being collected and will be published in due course.

Health Authorities (Pay Award)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the reasons for the relative level of pay award concluded by the health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Richards: Health authorities in Wales are not responsible for deciding the level of pay awards.

Cash Limits

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits for (a) his Department and (b) the office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales for the current financial year.

Mr. Redwood: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit on class XV, vote 2 will be reduced by £14,867,000 from £175,198,000 to £160,331,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 4 will be increased by £4,734,000, from £565,419,000 to £570,153,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 5 will be increased by £10,133,000, from £492,775,000 to £502,908,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 8 will be increased by £10,409,000 from £1,501,032,000 to £1,511,441,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 9 will be increased by £819,000 from £65,977,000 to £66,796,000; and the cash limit on class XV, vote 12 will be increased by £203,000 from £7,034,000 to £7,237,000.

Running costs provision for the Welsh Office and the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales, which was not spent in 1993–94 has been carried forward, under the normal end-year flexibility arrangements, into 1994–95, increasing the running costs limits by £915,000 from £77,094,000 to £78,009,000 and £172,000 from £3,273,000 to £3,445,000 respectively. This is required to cover additional costs in administering agricultural grants following the reform of the common agricultural policy. The local authority capital limit—WO/LACAP—will be increased by £10,996,000 from £465,469,000 to £476,465,000.

The decrease in the cash limit for vote 2 is the result mainly of a lower than expected demand—£14,400,000—for regional selective assistance, a transfer of £1 million of the Welsh Development Agency's grant in aid to their public expenditure provision for advances from the national loan fund following the introduction of a simplified loan fund scheme, a transfer of £687,000 to WO/LACAP to reflect the transfer of responsibility for rural development grants from the WDA and DBRW to local authorities, a transfer of £1,194,000 from class IV, vote 1 for the SMART and SPUR programmes and a transfer of £25,000 from class III, vote 4 for payments to the Central Science Laboratory.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 4 provides mainly for an additional £2,000,000 for equipment in respect of the "modern apprenticeship" scheme, £2,000,000 extra for the Further Education Funding Council for equipment and building maintenance, £465,000 to fund the transfer of responsibility to the Higher Education Funding Council from the Department for Education and the Home Office for the diplomas in social work and courses in social work and an additional £300,000 for grant-maintained schools for essential maintenance work.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 5 allows mainly for an additional £2,400,000 grant in aid for Cardiff Bay development corporation, £6,532,000 for central Government roads, including the take-up of £3,532,000 end-year flexibility entitlement and the take-up of £1,200,000 end-year flexibility entitlement for the urban investment grant scheme.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 8 results from an additional £4,000,000 for health authorities to help to reduce waiting list times, the take-up of the £10,735,000 of end-year flexibility entitlement for NHS trusts and capital, the transfer of £904,000 from class XII, vote 1 in respect of the purchasing of special health authorities' patient care services from the London postgraduate teaching hospitals and a reduction of £5,230,000 in NHS trusts' investments.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 9 is mainly in respect of the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement of £948,000 as a result of underspending in 1993–94, a transfer of £77,000 to class XV, vote 12 and increased appropriations in aid. Welsh Office running costs expenditure will be lower in 1995–96 in cash and real terms than in 1993–94 or 1994–95.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 12 results mainly from the take-up of £95,000 end-year flexibility entitlement and a transfer of £77,000 from class XV, vote 9 for the repayment costs for services provided to the office of Her Majesty's inspector of schools in Wales by the Welsh Office.

There is also a increase to a non-voted cash limit, WO/LACAP, resulting from the take-up of £10,309,000 end-year flexibility entitlement and the switch of £687,000 from class XV, vote 2 in respect of the transfer of responsibility to local authorities for the rural development grant scheme.

None of the proposed changes will add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hereditaments in Wales which fall (a) below and (b) above the threshold of £10,000 rateable value, for determining whether the lower limit on year-on-year increases in non-domestic rates bills applies, there are estimated to be, whose rates bills for 1995–96 in the absence of any transitional relief and assuming the rate poundage, as adjusted for the revaluation, is indexed for inflation, would be (i) under 50 per cent., (ii) between 50 and 80 per cent., (iii) between 80 and 120 per cent., (iv) between 120 and 200 per cent., (v) between 200 and 500 per cent., and (vi) over 500 per cent. of their bills for 1994–95; and if he will estimate for each of those categories the aggregate increase or decrease in rates bills between the two years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Estimates for Wales based on preliminary results of the 1995 revaluation and assuming for illustrative purposes that the rate poundage is unchanged in real terms between 1994–95 and 1995–96 are given in the following table. In deciding on the actual poundage for 1995–96 my right hon. Friend will have regard to schedule 7 of the Local Government Act 1988, which requires him to take account of both the rise in inflation and the rateable value of all appropriate hereditaments on the last day of the 1990 list and the first day of the 1995 list so that the rate yield from the two lists will be broadly the same.

1. Figures are rounded to nearest 5 units (— means less than 3 units).
2. Totals may not sum due to rounding.
3. Small properties have a 1 April 1990 rateable value less than £10,000.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of hereditaments where the transition for the 1990 changes is likely to be incomplete by 31 March 1995 but is likely to be (a) complete and (b) more nearly complete at 1 April 1995 by virtue of a reduction in the rateable value from that date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: An estimated 19,000 hereditaments in Wales will be in transition on 31 March 1995 when the existing transitional arrangements expire. On the basis of preliminary results from the 1995 revaluation, and assuming the rate poundage rises in line with inflation, less than 1,000 would find themselves with no further increase next year and 1,000 would be closer to reaching their full liability than they are now.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the regions, sectors and types of hereditament most affected by large increases or decreases in bills for non-domestic rates;

(2) what studies he has commissioned internally and from external consultants, of the likely impact of the April 1995 revaluation of non-domestic property in Wales on rateable values and non-domestic rate bills in different regions and different sectors of the economy; if he will publish those studies or summaries thereof; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Inland Revenue is analysing the results of the revaluation as they come in. Although numbers are subject to change, the current estimate of the effect of the revaluation on rateable values is given in the following table. The effect on rate bills will depend on the rate poundage which is determined for 1995–96 and the final form of the proposed transitional arrangements for the 1995 revaluation, details of which are contained in a Welsh Office consultation paper issued on 4 October. Copies of the consultation paper will be placed in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friend expects to announce his decisions by the end of November.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Television)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons prisoners can receive television via satellite dishes; and how many prisons are planning to install such dishes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. John Marshall, dated 1 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about satellite television in Prison Service establishments.

106 establishments in England and Wales have the capacity for prisoners to watch television via satellite dishes, during association periods. Prisoners ability to watch television is restricted and tightly controlled by staff. Satellite television is used as an alternative to the previous practice of watching videos. Satellite television is not financed from public funds. It is funded from the establishment general purposes fund, which is derived from the profits of the prison shop and gifts, or from voluntary contributions by prisoners or well wishers.

Four further prisons are planning to install this facility.

Prisons (Education)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what surveys his Department has carried out as to the effect on education courses in prisons in England and Wales when an inmate is moved to another prison where such courses are not being followed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the effect on prison education courses when a prisoner is moved to a prison that does not offer the same course of study.

Education courses pursued by a prisoner cannot take precedence when a move between prison establishments is dictated by overriding operational needs. Prison education departments are aware that such moves may occur and courses are planned to be as flexible as possible. This has not been the subject of a national survey.

On transfer, the receiving education department will make every effort to accommodate the prisoner's needs. The receiving department will accept any continuing costs associated with a course of study which a prisoner is pursuing, including distance learning, course costs and examination fees. We are developing a national curriculum framework, the benefits of which will be to help ensure the continuity of study for prisoners between establishments.

Prisoners (Possessions)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the amount of personal possessions a prison inmate is officially allowed to have in a prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prisoners' personal possessions.

Prison standing orders specify a number of personal items which prisoners may have in possession, and set out the basis on which decisions are to be made about other items. The fundamental principle determining the amount of property allowed in possession, as well as the acceptability of individual items, is that effective searching should not be prevented, nor should any items constitute a security, safety or health risk.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates (a) men and (b) women have been charged and found guilty of being in possession of drugs in prisons in England and Wales since 1 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many inmates in prisons in England and Wales were charged and found guilty of being in possession of drugs since 1 January. The provisional figures for January–September 1994 show 1,722 proved adjudication findings for male inmates and 13 for female inmates charged with being in possession of controlled drugs. The figures include any proved charges of inciting or assisting other prisoners to possess controlled drugs.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors to each of the prisons in England and Wales have been charged with attempting to take drugs into a prison since 1 January.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of visitors to prisons in England and Wales who have been charged with attempting to take drugs into prison since 1 January .

The Prison Service does not keep a central record of decisions by the police to bring charges.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to support prison officers in their day-to-day duties, with particular reference to the searching of prison inmates and prisoners' cells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the action taken to support prison officers with their day-to-day duties, particularly with the searching of prison inmates and prisoners' cells.

Prison Officers duties are varied and include maintenance of security and control; provision of regime activities such as offending behaviour programmes; and other work with prisoners. The Prison Service has made significant progress in all of these areas during the last 18 months, due to the energy and commitment of prison officers and other staff.

Particular measures to support prison officers in their security role include:

- the use of x-ray machines and metal detector portals and metal detectors to help search people, property and vehicles entering or leaving prisons
- specially trained dog handlers and dogs are available to search and detect items such as drugs or explosives in prisons
- CCTV has been installed in some visits areas
- prison officers receive training in searching procedures and techniques as part of their initial training
- the security manual, issued to all establishments giving advice on searching procedures, is being revised and simplified
- Governors have to draw up local searching strategies based on the nature of the prison and the type of prisoners held
- major refurbishment schemes include significant security improvements, in particular to prisoners' cells
- monthly security bulletins are issued to draw attention to lessons from recent incidents and to provide information to Governors on special security topics
- drug testing is due to be introduced under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill
- perimeter security is being improved in many establishments
- court escorts have been made more security by the use of double cuffing for category B prisoners and the increased use of secure vehicles

Control measures include:

the strengthening of Governors' disciplinary powers

- about half of establishments have introduced differential regimes and local incentive schemes to improve behaviour
- more cellular accommodation is being provided for category C prisoners
- new allocation procedures have been introduced for category C prisoners, designed to ensure that the mix of prisoners in establishments is monitored and controlled to minimise the risk of disturbances
- a project is researching violence in prisons with a view to developing guidance on best practice

Improvements concerned with regimes include:

- prisoners are expected to engage actively in work, training, education and other purposeful activities. The target for increasing levels of purposeful activity is being exceeded
- offending behaviour programmes are being expanded, with more training for officers involved in these programmes
- more than 700 NVQ schemes for prisoners are being implemented through prison workshops and other facilities

Prison officers will have more time to concentrate on these activities as the disruptive court escort work is contracted out and work not requiring a prison officer's expertise is transferred to other grades.

Domestic Service

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had as to the feasibility of allowing overseas domestic workers in the United Kingdom to change their employer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We have received a number of representations in support of allowing overseas domestic workers to change employers but we consider that this would be contrary to our immigration controls and against the interest of the resident labour force. Each case involving a domestic worker who wishes to remain in the United Kingdom after having left his or her employer is carefully considered and account is taken of any compassionate circumstances.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the privatisations which his Department has promoted since 1979, indicating, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Howard: The available information is as follows:

Name of Body	Purchaser	Date sold	Proceeds of sale £ million
National Transcommunications Limited (NTL)	Mercury Asset management	24 October 1991	70·00
DTELS	NTL	1 March 1994	6·60
United Racecourses (Holdings) Limited	Racecourse Holdings Trust Limited	29 April 1994	30·25

No information is held on the current value of the companies concerned.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum have been determined since the passage of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993; in how many cases the applicant has been allowed to stay in the United Kingdom; how many principal applicants were successful; and how many dependants they had.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on decisions made since the implementation of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993—1 August 1993 to 30 September 1994—and the estimated number of dependants accompanying these decided cases is given in the table.

Decisions[1] on applications received for asylum in the United Kingdom, and dependants, August 1993 to September 1994

	Decisions made in August 1993 - September 1994
Total decisions made on principal applications for asylum[2]	24,665
- dependants accompanying cases decided[3]	7,565
Cases recognised as a refugee and granted asylum[2]	845
- dependants accompanying cases granted asylum[3]	600

- dependants accompanying cases refused asylum and exceptional leave[3]	5,345

---

[1] Figures are rounded to the nearest 5.

[2] Exclude dependants.

[3] Information on dependants is of those applying with the principal applicant or arriving subsequently, before the principal application was decided. Information excludes dependants who arrive after the principal decision.

[4] Including refusals on the grounds that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country and refusals under para 180F of the Immigration Rules for failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum are still outstanding after (a) four years, (b) five years and (c) six years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: At 30 September 1994—the latest date for which the information is available—by the estimated number of asylum applications outstanding was 52,760. Information on the number of these cases waiting longer than four, five, or six years is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the processing period of asylum applications at the present time.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The estimated average length of time between the receipt of an asylum application and the decision, for cases decided on application for asylum received since the introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993—26 July 1993 to 30 September 1994—was 4·7 months.

Cannabis

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the therapeutic uses of cannabis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations have been received from Members of Parliament, doctors and patients claiming that cannabis relieves the symptoms of a number of medical conditions and asking if it can be made available to treat them.

The Department of Health is considering these claims in conjunction with the Medicines Control Agency and the Home Office.

Sri Lankan Tamils

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankan Tamils (a) have applied for and (b) have been granted political asylum in the United Kingdom since 1 January.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on Sri Lankan Tamils are not separately identifiable in the statistics. The table gives information for the period 1 January 1994 to 30 September 1994 on the number of applications for asylum from nationals of Sri Lanka and decisions made.

Decisions[1] on applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, from Sri Lankan nationals, 1 January 1994–30 September 1994

	Number of principal applicants
Asylum applications[2]	1,835
Decisions[2,3]	815

Decisions[1] on applications[2] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, from Sri Lankan nationals, 1 January 1994–30 September 1994

	Number of principal applicants
Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain[4]	65
Refused asylum and ELR—after full consideration	615
Refused under para 180F[5]	65
Refused on safe third country grounds[6]	60

[1] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5.

[2] Figures exclude information on applications made overseas.

[3] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in 1994.

[4] Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.

[5] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitation to interview to establish identity.

[6] Refused on the grounds that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankan Tamils have been deported from the United Kingdom since 1 January.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Two Sri Lankan citizens were removed from the United Kingdom under the deportation process in the period January to September 1994. No distinction is made in statistical records between Tamils and other Sri Lankans.

West Midlands Police

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the conclusions of the inquiry being carried out by Leicestershire police into alleged bribery in the West Midlands police service will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The investigation, which is being conducted under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority, is still in progress.

Any announcement of criminal or disciplinary proceedings is a matter for the chief constable of West Midlands police, the Crown Prosecution Service and the Police Complaints Authority.

British Dependent Territories

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to extend the right of abode in the United Kingdom to all British dependent territory passport holders;

(2) what plans he has to regularise the position of British dependent territories passport holders after June 1997, in respect of the position of Gibraltarians and Falkland Islanders.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: None. There is no reason to change the status of British dependent territories citizens either now or after June 1997.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Howard: As at 1 September 1993, 40 per cent. of public appointments made by the Home Office were held by women. The 1994 figures will be announced in due course.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responsibilities his Department has for liaison with the French Government regarding civil defence emergencies resulting from transport of nuclear material near the channel islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply. All movements of radioactive materials in the French and English territorial waters of the English channel are subject to the maritime nuclear emergency plan for the English channel. The plan is administered by the prefet maritime, Cherbourg, controlled through the cross-channel maritime communications centre, and involves all the relevant United Kingdom and French authorities.

General Oleg Kalugin

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decision has been taken on the application by General Oleg Kalugin for a visa to visit the United Kingdom; and what were the reasons for the decision.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Mr. Kalugin's application for a visa is at present under consideration. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as a decision has been taken.

Airports (Immigration Officers)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom airports receiving scheduled flights form abroad do not have permanent, full-time immigration service staff stationed at the airport.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Immigration Service staff are stationed permanently at all airports where their full-time attendance is justified. There are seven small regional airports operating scheduled passenger flights where Immigration Service staff are not stationed on a permanent basis.

Misuse

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the number of local drugs prevention teams in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Funding for the drugs prevention initiative in England is being renewed for a further four years from April 1995. From that date there will be 12 teams, covering some 16 million people rather than the 6 million covered by the current teams.

Arrangements for building from the work of the two teams in Scotland is being considered in the light of the report of the drugs task force. In Wales, a new strategy for the prevention of drug and alcohol misuse is being developed. There are no current plans to establish a drugs prevention team in Northern Ireland.

Police Authorities (Allowances)

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the differences in financial allowances between the independent appointees to the new police authorities and the allowances permitted for the local authority and magistrates' representatives.

Mr. Maclean: Councillor and independent members of new police authorities will be able to claim £15 per hour for time spent on police authority business, up to a limit of £120 per day and £3,000 per year—£6,000 per year if they are the chairman of the authority.

Magistrate members of new police authorities will, as at present, be able to claim financial loss allowance at the rates payable to them as magistrates.

Al Fayed Brothers (Citizenship Application)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) formal or (b) informal representations he has received from (i) hon. Members and (ii) others asking for reconsideration of the refusal to grant British citizenship to Mr. Mohammed Al Fayed and Mr. Ali Al Fayed.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As their applications have not yet been determined, the question of representations asking for reconsideration of refusal does not arise.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will name the referees who have supported the applications for British citizenship of Mr. Ali al Fayed and Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No. It is not our practice to disclose such details.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what formal or informal representations he has received from persons other than hon. Members on the applications by Mr. Mohammed Al Fayed or Mr. Ali Al Fayed for British citizenship.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We have received representations from three people other than hon. Members concerning these applications. It is not our practice to disclose the details of private communications.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the consultations held with ministerial colleagues concerning the applications for British citizenship by Mr. Mohammed Al Fayed and Mr. Ali Al Fayed; and what special principles apply when considering such applications.

Mr. Howard: I made a public statement on this matter on 24 October 1994, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Private Security Industries

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with his European counterparts regarding regulating standards in the private security industries across the European Union.

Mr. Maclean: No such discussions have taken place.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has plans to extend to other categories of offenders the powers contained in section 44 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to require sex offenders to be supervised for the whole of the remainder of their sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans at present to extend the powers contained in section 44 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to cover other offences.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of whether judges are sufficiently aware of the powers contained in section 44 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to require offenders to be supervised for the whole of the remainder of their sentence following automatic conditional release.

Mr. Maclean: A circular was sent to all judges on 5 March 1992 describing the provisions contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 which were to be implemented in 1992, including section 44. The statistics suggest an increased use of the power in the years since its introduction.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions section 44 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 has been used by judges to require contrived supervision of an offender for the remainder of his or her sentence.

Mr. Maclean: The number of cases in which a court has ordered that an offender should be supervised for the whole of his sentence under section 44 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 are as follows:

1993 — 11
1994 (January-June) — 34

It is likely that the recorded figures for 1992 and 1993 are understated because of initial difficulties in probation areas in the recording of such cases.

Local Government Review

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about future police and fire service arrangements in Humberside, Lincolnshire and North Yorkshire, and Avon and Somerset.

Mr. Howard: In the light of the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 25 October, Official Report, columns 534-37 about the future arrangements for local government in Humberside. I announced my intention to consider and consult upon whether a separate Humberside police force, based on the four unitary authorities, should be retained. I propose to make a statement on future policing arrangements in Lincolnshire and North Yorkshire when the Humberside police review has been completed and I have reached a decision on that matter.

In the case of the Avon and Somerset constabulary, its present boundaries are unaffected by the decision to replace the county of Avon by four unitary authorities. The new unitary authorities will, from the appointed day of reorganisation, replace Avon county council as relevant councils for the appointment of councillor members of the police authority.

For fire services, in the light of advice which I have received from the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council and from Her Majesty's chief inspector of fire services, I propose to establish combined fire authorities when local government in Avon, Humberside and North Yorkshire is reorganised. These combined authorities will take over the functions under the Fire Services Act 1947 which are currently exercised by separate county councils. The provision of fire services in Lincolnshire and Somerset will remain unchanged.

Cash Limits

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what proposals he has for changes to the 1994–95 cash limits within his responsibilities.

Mr. Howard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VIII, vote 3—Home Office administration, immigration, probation and police support services, England and Wales—will be increased by £39,000 from £1,212,682,000 to £1,212,721,000. This is to enable a special capital grant at the rate of 100 per cent. to be made in order to fund the preliminary stages of the national probation service information systems strategy, for which the inner London probation service will act as the interim contractual authority. The total grant of £755,000 has been financed by a transfer of £604,000 from other probation capital grants, together with a reduction of £151,000 in the local authority capital non-voted HO/LACAP cash limit from £122,291,000 to £122,140,000. The new grant will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. The cash limit for class VIII, vote 3 is increased by only £39,000 because at the same time a transfer of £112,000 is being made to the Welsh Office, class XV, vote 4, to meet the costs of providing additional places for Home Office-sponsored students at universities.

Drug Deaths

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his calculation of numbers who have died as a result of the use of (a) solvents, (b) LSD, (c) amyl nitrate, (d) butyl nitrate, (e) khat, (f) temazepam, (g) ecstasy, (h) amphetamine and (i) GBH in each of the past five years.

Mr Michael Forsyth [holding answer 31 October 1994]: The information requested is contained in Tables 17, 19 and 20 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of drug addicts notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom" and is summarised in the table:

Deaths from solvents and certain controlled drugs, United Kingdom, 1988–92[1]

	Number of persons
	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Volatile substances	89	84	112	87	68
LSD	—	—	—	1	2
Benzodiazepines [2]	—	308	311	316	370
"Ecstasy"[3]	1	2	—	5	—
Amphetamines	4	3	4	15	10

[1] No information is available on deaths from the use of alkylnitrites (which includes amyl and butyl nitrite), khat, and GHB (gamma-hydroxy- butyrate), none of which are controlled drugs.

[2] No data are available before 1989. This group of drugs includes Temazepam, for which separate figures are not available.

[3] MDMA and other drugs related to MDA (methylenedioxy-amphetamine).

IRA Prisoners

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if IRA prisoners in Whitemoor prison have been permitted to make telephone calls of up to one hour's duration per month on telephones not limited to inland calls;

(2) what steps were (a) required by his Department and (b) taken by the Prison Service, at Whitemoor prison prior to 9 September, in response to (i) Prison Governors Association comments concerning Whitemoor prison (ii) representations from Whitemoor's board of visitors, (iii) HM chief inspector of prisons' report on Whitemoor and (iv) representations from the Prison Officers Association regarding Whitemoor;

(3) what (a) discussions there with the present governor of Whitemoor prison and (b) instructions were given to him regarding any change in regime from that pertaining immediately prior to his appointment;

(4) what arrangements existed for monitoring phone calls made on official telephones by IRA prisoners at Whitemoor prison prior to 9 September;

(5) how the prison regime at Whitemoor differs from any other comparable prison;

(6) if high-risk prisoners in special secure units (a) are and (b) have been permitted to make telephone calls of up to one hour's duration per month on telephones not limited to inland calls.

(7) what special instructions he gave to the director-general of the Prison Service regarding the security arrangements for IRA prisoners, following the announcement that IRA prisoners, following the announcement that IRA prisoners would be moved from the mainland back to Northern Ireland;

(8) what arrangements exist for monitoring phone calls made on official telephones by high-risk and exceptional risk category A prisoners.

(9) in what ways the Whitemoor regime for IRA prisoners is different in terms of control and privileges from that of other category A prisoners;

(10) what measures have been taken to review and improve the security of prisons, following the recent security breaches at Whitemoor and Durham prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: These issues are a matter for the Director General of the Prison Service. He wrote to the hon. Member on 25 October and a copy of that reply has been placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he required the Director General of the Prison Service to review the circumstances and the security arrangements of IRA prisoners under Prison Service control following the recent movement of IRA prisoners from the mainland to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: There was no requirement to review the security of IRA prisoners remaining in prisons in England and Wales following the transfer of IRA prisoners to Northern Ireland. Security arrangements are to be examined in the light of the results of the inquiry by Sir John Woodcock.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Back-to-work Bonus

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the maximum amount of the proposed back-to-work bonus for each partner where a couple are both claiming benefit on a means-tested basis; and whether the total accumulated credit from part-time earnings of both partners would be payable when one of them moves into full-time work.

Mr. Roger Evans: The maximum amount of the proposed back-to-work bonus is £1,000 per benefit unit. The earnings of both partners may contribute towards building up this amount, which would be payable in full when the couple left benefit as a result either of the claimant moving into work of 16 hours or more per week, or the claimant's partner moving into work of 24 hours or more per week.

State Retirement Pension

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women aged 100 years and over are in receipt of a state retirement pension.

Mr. Arbuthnot: At 31 March 1994, the latest date for which figures are available, a total of 830 men and 6,640 women, aged 100 and over (figures include persons residing overseas) were in receipt of state retirement pension ("State Retirement Pension" means a contributory retirement pension, a non-contributory retirement pension or a graduated retirement benefit).

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates will be the cost in a full year of raising the level of pension that may be received without affecting benefit from £35 to £50 a week combined with the removal of the age threshold; and how many people will benefit from this.

Mr. Roger Evans: Raising the level of occupational or personal pension that can be received without affecting a contribution-based job seeker's allowance from £35 to £50 per week, combined with removing the age threshold, would save around an estimated £10 million in a full year at current prices. It is estimated that around 15,000 claimants would gain through the raising of the abatement limit to £50.

Notes:

1. Estimates rounded to nearest £10 million and 5,000 cases.
2. Estimates assume:
    a. 2·55 million unemployed claimants (GB);
    b. 600,000 Unemployment Benefit claimants.
    3. Losers are estimated using the Policy Simulation Model with 1990/91/92. Family Expenditure Survey data and 1994 Unemployment Benefit Statistics.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give the latest cost of fully restoring the value of retirement pensions paid to United Kingdom citizens living abroad on the basis that the normal uprating had been paid as if the recipient had continued to live in this country;

(2) what would have been the cost of uprating the retirement pensions of United Kingdom citizens living abroad on the same basis as those pensions paid to those living in the United Kingdom in this financial year.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The estimated cost of paying fully indexed benefits to all people receiving state retirement and widows pensions living abroad whose benefits are not uprated is £230 million a year. The cost in the 1994–95 financial year of paying just the April 1994 uprating to these pensioners is estimated to be £16 million. Separate figures are not available on the cost of uprating benefits only for retirement pensioners or those who are citizens of the United Kingdom.

Income Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have received a reduced rate of income support in the form of a hardship payment in the latest year for which figures are available and in each of the preceding three years.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table:

Awards of income support to prevent hardship

Period	Number of hardship payments
April 1990–March 1991	2,415
April 1991–March 1992	2,992
April 1992–March 1993	3,477
April 1993–March 1994[1]	3,701
April 1994–August 1994 (4 months)[1]	1,677

Note:

[1] Figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people who gave up employment to protect the benefit entitlement of a spouse or partner in the latest period for which an estimate can be made; and what change he estimates there would have been in that figure if the 16-hour limit had been raised to 24 hours.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the form requested. We estimate that approximately 20,000 households will benefit from the change in the hours rule for working partners, when the changes from 16 to 24 hours as proposed with the introduction of job seeker's allowance are introduced.

Family Credit

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employees of his Department and of each of its agencies are in receipt of family credit payments.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long it took to process a family credit application in each region for England during 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the form requested as family credit claims are administered centrally. The clearance times for Great Britain as a whole were as follows:

1991–92

64·4 per cent. in 18 working days

89·2 per cent. in 35 working days

1992–93

60·7 per cent. in 13 working days

96·8 per cent. in 45 working days

Source: Social Security Departmental Report.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what category of claimant would continue to draw income support if the job seeker's allowance were in operation.

Mr. Roger Evans: Claimants in specified groups who are not required to be available for work could continue to claim income support. The main groups will be lone parents, men aged 60–64, those with significant caring responsibilities and people with disabilities.

However, claimants in these groups who want to claim job seeker's allowance could do so provided that they meet the entitlement conditions, including being available for and actively seeking work.

Job Seeker's Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether someone refused a hardship payment in circumstances described in paragraph 4.39 of "Jobseeker's Allowance" is eligible for a crisis loan from the social fund.

Mr. Roger Evans: Claimants who would not have access to hardship payments in the circumstances described in paragraph 4.39 of the job seekers's allowance White Paper would not have access to the social fund for a crisis loan to cover living expenses. Provision of such a loan would negate the effect of the sanction. Crisis loans would, however, be available in those circumstances to help make good damage caused by unforeseen disaster, such as fire or flood.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes are proposed in the cash limits or running costs limits of his Department.

Mr. Hague: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIII vote 4 will be increased by £45,825,000 from £2,724,356,000 to £2,770,181,000. The revision takes account of increased requirements resulting from policy changes—£43,526,000, of which £29,948,000 is running costs—an increase of £77,454,000—of which £66,474,000 is running costs—in respect of the end-year flexibility arrangements, an increase of £350,000—running costs—offset by a corresponding reduction on Crown Prosecution Services; Crown Prosecutions and legal services, class IX vote 7, an increase of £3,000—running costs—offset by a corresponding reduction on Her Majesty's Treasury, class XVII vote 1, an increase of £56,000—running costs—offset by a corresponding reduction on Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England, class XII vote 3, a reduction of £5,152,000 in running cost cover for services provided by Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) on repayment and an increase of £75,564,000 in appropriations in aid.

Further running cost changes arise from a reduction of £3,018,000 as a result of a reallocation to capital and other current expenditure, a reduction of £2,169,000 resulting from a transfer to a net running cost section of the vote and an increase of £5,029,000 in value added tax refunds.

As a result of these changes, the running cost limit of the Department of Social Security will be increased by £81,463,000 from £2,928,784,000 to £3,010,247,000.

The additional requirements will be changed to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consideration she has given to the report on the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation's investigation of complaints from disabled people about delays in assessment for and the provision of services under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; what action she is taking; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what consideration the Minister for Disabled People has given to the report of the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation's investigation of complaints from disabled people about delays in assessment for and the provision of services under section two of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: We have seen a copy of the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation's end of project report, "Disabled People Have Rights".

Local authorities' duties under the 1970 Act remain unchanged, however, and they were reminded of their legal obligations in December 1992. We have also set out procedures for the investigation of complaints, and the Department follows up cases where it is alleged that a local authority is in breach of its statutory duties.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the number and (b) the percentage of (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful claims for disability living allowance and attendance allowance for (1) disability living allowance (care), (2) disability living allowance (mobility) and (3) attendance allowance in each year since 1992-93 and the first quarter of 1994–95.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability living allowance decisions in which (a) review requests and (b) appeals were made in respect of (i) disability living allowance (care), (ii) disability living allowance, mobility and (iii) attendance allowance were made in each year since 1992–93 and the first quarter of 1994–95; and what percentage of all decisions each formed.

Children in Hospital

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce a visiting costs scheme for families with a sick child in hospital.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health.

War Pensions

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many certificates he issued in 1992 and 1993 under section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 for the purposes of awarding war pension to former service personnel.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Such statistics are not routinely kept; however, it is estimated that, in total, about a dozen section 10 certificates were issued in 1992 and 1993.

Official Hospitality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total amount spent on official hospitality by (a) her Department and (b) her agencies for each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: Expenditure on hospitality, including basic refreshments for meetings of expert advisory groups and working groups and for meetings with representatives of other Government departments, voluntary organisations and public bodies is shown in the table. Separate figures are only available for the agencies from 1991–92. All ministers hospitality budgets are underspent.

Figures have not been adjusted for inflation.

General Practitioner Fundholding

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has done into the cost-effectiveness of consultant clinics in fundholding practices.

Mr. Malone: The proposed programme of work for the National Centre for Primary Care Research includes a study of the cost-effectiveness of specialist clinics in general practice.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect of general practitioner fundholding on the doctor/patient relationship.

Mr. Malone: General practitioner fundholders are free to use resources directly to improve services and secure the care they judge best for their patients. This can only strengthen the doctor/patient relationship.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the status of fees that consultants receive from general practitioner fundholders.

Mr. Malone: National health service consultants are free to make personal arrangements with any health care purchaser, subject to their contractual arrangements with their NHS employer.

Hormone Replacement Therapy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on (a) the production and (b) the availability of the hormone replacement drug premarin in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: Premarin is produced by the pharmaceutical industry using pregnant mares' urine, which is collected on farms in Canada and the United States of America, not in the United Kingdom. During that part of the pregnancy when oestrogen levels are high, the mares are fitted with a lightweight harness. The collection device is attached to this and the urine drains into it. Both the Canadian and United States authorities have said that no mares are catheterised to collect urine, and have confirmed that all the farms satisfy their animal welfare concerns.

In the United Kingdom, medicinal products need to be licensed under the Medicines Act 1971. Before a product licence is granted, a company needs to satisfy the Licensing Authority of the product's safety, quality and efficacy. Premarin is licensed for use in the United Kingdom, and there are no grounds under the Medicines Act for withdrawing it from use.

Asthma

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure on general practitioner-prescribed anti-asthma medication and preparations in each family health services authority area in 1993–94 expressed in terms of (a) net ingredient cost and (b) net ingredient cost per capita.

Mr. Malone: The information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on general practitioner-prescribed anti-asthma medication and preparations in 1993–94, broken down by drugs prescribed.

Mr. Malone: Information on individual drugs prescribed is commercially confidential. Information broken down by British National Formulary classification to sub section level is shown in the table.

Mr. Malone: Information on individual prescribed drugs is commercially confidential. The number of prescribed items for asthma preparations down to British National Formulary sub-section level for the whole population is shown in table 1. The number of prescription items for asthma preparations for patients exempt on grounds of youth down to BNF section level is shown in table 2.

Dispensing doctor prescriptions are not analysed into exempt, non-exempt or other categories and are therefore excluded; personally administered items are free of charge.

3. Drugs used in the treatment of asthma are contained in the British National Formulary sections 3.1, 3.2, and 3.3. The therapeutic classifications are based on the September 1992 issue. The drugs for Bronchodilators may be used for other conditions.

Dentistry

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS dental check-ups took place in each year since 1988 by (a) regional health authority, (b) district health authority, on 1 April 1992 boundaries, (c) family health service authority and (d) nationally.

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library.

Blood Transfusion Centres

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the blood transfusion centres which have been issued (a) a wholesale dealers' licence and (b) a manufacturer's special licence under the Medicines Act 1968, and those which have not been issued with those licences.

Mr. Sackville: Since April 1994, the National Blood Authority has held a wholesale dealers licence and a manufacturers licence for the national blood service as a whole.

The wholesale dealers licence currently includes the following centres: Northern, West Yorkshire, East Anglia, Trent, Oxford and Mersey. Wessex, West Midlands and Blood Services South-West (Bristol) have been approved and are yet to be shown on the licence. The remaining transfusion centres do not currently undertake wholesale dealing activities and do not therefore require to be licenced.

In relation to the manufacturers licence; the Medicines Control Agency has identified specific work to be undertaken at the Wessex and West Midlands centres. The NBA has given assurances to the MCA on this and the MCA is content for the processing and testing functions, for which all centres are required to be licenced, to continue at these centres.

Health Authority Funding

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to implement changes in the weighted capitation formula for London to take account of deprivation.

Mr. Sackville: The modified weighted capitation formula takes account of deprivation by including a wide range of health and socio-economic factors.

In 1995–96, it will be used to inform allocations to regional health authorities. It will be for Thames regions to decide which formula to use for London district health authorities.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes for each authority's revenue budget were brought about as a result of the replacement of the resource allocation working party system of determining funding allocation.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 3 December 1993, Official Report, column 808.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the figures for revenue funding for each purchasing health authority or equivalent in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland in 1992–93, 1993–94, 1994–95 and the estimated figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Sackville: Information for England will be placed in the Library for 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95. No information is available for future years.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Performance-related Pay

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received in response to her proposal to introduce local performance-related pay into the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Since announcing our plans for reforming national health services in "Working for Patients" in 1989 and proposals for strengthening the links between reward and performance in the national health service in the citizens charter in 1991, we have received representations from a wide range of organisations and individuals including hon. Members, the Trust Federation, the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts, chairmen, chief executives and human resource directors of trusts and authorities, professional bodies and trade unions.

Cows' Milk Allergy

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that new-born babies should be tested for allergy to cows' milk; and what investigation she has conducted into such a proposal.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to develop a policy to test new babies for allergy to cows' milk. Their risk of allergy may be assessed from their family history of allergic disorder. Breast feeding is recommended for all babies and this is of particular importance for babies at risk of allergic disorder.

Psychiatric Beds

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that the capital and revenue costs of funding 45 extra NHS medium-secure psychiatric beds for south-east Thames will be made available in the next financial year.

Mr. Bowis: South Thames regional health authority, in conjunction with the Department of Health, the national health service executive and North Thames regional health authority, is currently reviewing the supply of medium-secure psychiatric beds in the Thames regions.

Eye Tests

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had eye tests in each year since 1988; what proportion of these was NHS provided; what proportion was assisted by the voucher scheme, listed by (a) regional health authority, (b) district health authority, on 1 April 1992 boundaries, (c) family health service authority and (d) nationally.

Mr. Malone: The total number of sight tests performed has not been collected centrally since April 1989 when universal entitlement to national health service sight tests was ended.

The number of sight tests paid for by family health services authorities in England since 1988–89 will be placed in the Library. Such information is not available by district health authority.

From a survey carried out in 1993 on behalf of a technical sub-committee representing the Department and the optometric profession, it was estimated that the total number of sight tests performed in Great Britain in 1993–94 would be 13·184 million, 50 per cent. of which would be NHS.

The number of vouchers paid for will be placed in the Library. Such information is not available by district health authority.

Acute Units (Closure)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether guidance has been issued to health authorities on how funds released by the closure or reductions of acute units are to be transferred to the primary health care sector.

Mr. Malone: It is for local health authorities, taking account of clinical priority, the views of local people and the available resources, to assess the level of services needed to meet the requirements in their area and to negotiate appropriate provision. We will be examining the changing pattern of service provision to ensure that patients continue to receive effective and high quality care.

London Implementation Group

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the budget of the London implementation group for each year since it was established.

Mr. Malone: The London implementation group was established in February 1993. The LIG's budget for 1993–94 and 1994–95 has been £2 million. For both years, those figures include the clearing house for displaced staff and for 1994–95 the budget figure includes the primary care support force.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions her Department is taking to ensure that reductions in junior doctors' hours do not create or increase shortages of junior doctors in (a) paediatrics and (b) other specialties.

Mr. Malone: Since the new deal was launched in 1991 we have funded an extra 750 career grade posts specifically to reduce juniors' hours.

The number of paediatric consultants increased by 9·1 per cent. in 1992–93.

In accident and emergency the increase was 11 per cent. and in both anaesthetics and obstetrics and gynaecology, the increase was nearly 4 per cent.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of public appointments made by her Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The latest published figures show that 35 per cent. of the public appointments made by the Department were held by women. Figures for 1994 will be announced in due course.

Visiting Costs Scheme

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has, following the publication of Department of Health advice in "Welfare of Children and Young People in Hospital", to implement a visiting costs scheme to ensure that the parents of hospitalised children are not prevented from visiting their children regularly because of a lack of money.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce a visiting costs scheme for families with a sick child in hospital.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will establish a fund for hospital visiting costs; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will list the concessions available to families visiting sick children, in respect of travelling, parking and other necessities.

Mr. Sackville: The Hospital travel costs scheme provides financial assistance to parents on low income to enable them to accompany their children to and from hospital where this is medically necessary. The majority of national health service hospitals provide accommodation for parents to enable them to stay overnight at the hospital while their children receive treatment. Financial help is available from the social fund to enable parents in receipt of income support to visit their children in hospital. There are no plans to extend these arrangements.

Community Health Sheffield NHS Trust

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the transfers of land and property that have taken place over the past six months to Community Health Sheffield NHS trust and their value at the time of transfer.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Community Health Sheffield national health service trust. The hon. Member may want to contact the chairman, Sir Michael Carlisle, for details.

Kidney Treatment

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements for availability for kidney dialysis treatments exist in Great Britain for patients requiring regular dialysis treatments whilst on holiday or visiting relatives.

Mr. Sackville: Renal units in the United Kingdom will provide dialysis for patients on holiday or visiting relatives provided there is spare dialysis facility available. Usually the patient's regular unit will make the arrangements for them.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Department's estimate of the cost of providing indoor and outdoor powered wheelchairs remains as set out in the letter date-stamped 23 March, ref. POH(4) 4295/111 from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), to the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mrs. Lait); when and by whom the estimate was made; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Calculation of the likely cost of supplying powered indoor/outdoor chairs to all those who qualify and require one is complex. The defining factors are assumed need, purchase cost through bulk purchasing, the cost of maintenance and repair and the effect on costs of refurbishment and re-issue of chairs.

The estimate referred to was based on a simple extrapolation derived from a broad estimate of need contained in the 1986 McColl report.

On 1 July I announced a review of wheelchair services in the context of the feasibility and affordability of a voucher scheme. As part of this review we have commissioned firm and practically based costings including for supply of indoor/outdoor powered chairs. We will be announcing our conclusions on this exercise in due course.

General Practitioner Lists

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in each family health services/authority area have been removed from their GP's list and how many have been (a) under 18 years, (b) women over 60 years, (c) men over 65 years of age, (d) registered disabled people, (e) are in receipt of repeat prescriptions and (f) recorded as having been previously removed from a GP's list in each of the past four years.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 25 October, Official Report, column 743–44.

Nicotine

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will bring forward proposals to require manufacturers to reduce nicotine levels by 10 per cent. each year.

Mr. Sackville: No. The Cigarettes (Maximum Tar Yield) (Safety) Regulations 1992 set the current maximum tar yield in cigarettes at 15 mg and require a further reduction to 12 mg from 1 January 1998. There is a relationship between tar and nicotine yields and we have no plans for specific legislation on nicotine yields.

Cash Limits

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the cash limits of her Department in 1994–95.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cash limit for class XII, vote 1—Hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, England—will be reduced by £44,104,000, from £21,778,220,000 to £21,734,116,000. That reduction allows for transfers of £44,500,000 to class XII, vote 4—Family health services (part), England—for pharmaceutical services, following a reappraisal of general practitioner fundholders' drugs budget requirements; £120,000 to class XII, vole 3—Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England—for Special Hospitals Services Authority audit services; £241,000 to class XIV, vote 14—Hospital, community health, family health (part) and other services, Scotland—and £165,000 to the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland for de-designated supra regional services; £904,000 to class XV, vote 8—Hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, Wales—£289,000 to class XIV, vote 14—Hospital, community health, family health (part) and other health services, Scotland—and £24,000 to the Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland for London post-graduate teaching hospitals special health authorities services and £48,000 to class XIV, vote 17—Education, arts and libraries, Scotland—for clinical placements in England of Glasgow Caledonian university students. The overall reduction is partially offset by £1,647,000 from class XII, vote 3—Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England—for work of the NHS Estates Management and Health Building Agency—£1,447,000—and for the regional health authorities print budget for NHS forms—£200,000; £333,000 from class XII, vote 6—Office of Population Censuses and Surveys—for the NHS central register superannuation costs and £207,000 from class VII, vote 3—Regeneration initiatives, England—for the urban programme.

The cash limit for class XII, vote 3—Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England—will be reduced by £2,946,000—from £1,594,202,000 to £1,591,256,000. This reduction allows for transfers of £1,647,000—£200,000 running costs—to class XII, vote 1—Hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, England—as mentioned above; £1,158,000 to class XIV, vote 14—Hospital, community health, family health (part) and other services, Scotland—for work of the NHS Estate Management and the Health Building Agency—£318,000—and the Prescription Pricing Authority—£840,000; £195,000—£183,000 running costs—to class XIX, vote 3—Privy Council Office—for the drugs co-ordination unit; £56,000—running costs—to class X111 vote 4—Department of Social Security, administration and miscellaneous services—for the departmental records office; and £10,000—running costs—to class III, vote 4—Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food: agriculture, food and fishing services—for the Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. The overall decrease is partially offset by a transfer of £120,000 from class XII, vote 1 as mentioned above.

The non-voted cash limit for supplementary credit approvals for personal social services—DoH/LACAP—in England is to be increased by £1,185,000—from £26,100,000 to £27,285,000—in respect of the take-up of entitlement to carry forward of underspends from the 1993–94 financial year under the end year flexibility arrangements as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994, at Official Report, columns 729–34.

The Department's gross running cost limit will be reduced by £449,000 from £258,302,000 to £257,853,000. This reflects the transfers mentioned above.

All increases will either be offset by savings, increased receipts or transfers to or from other votes or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Burnley Heath Care Trust

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has received regarding Burnley Health Care Trust; and if she will make a statement.

(2) If she now proposes to call for an independent inquiry into the problems at Burnley Health Care Trust; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a number of representations about Burnley health care national health service trust, some of which call for an independent inquiry. The trust has commissioned an independent expert investigation into the management of the women's unit at the trust and the circumstances of the dismissal of consultant gynaecologist Mr. Ian Mahady, and will make public the findings.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether national health service trusts are required to produce the names and addresses of trust board members; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: National health service trusts publish the names of board members in their annual reports. There is no requirement on NHS trusts to make public the private addresses of board members.

Sister Pat Cooksley

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the statement of the Minister of State of 25 October, Official Report, column 854, what is, or has been, the nature and type of retraining undertaken by Sister Pat Cooksley.

Mr. Malone: That is a confidential matter between Sister Cooksley and the Plymouth Hospitals national health service trust.

Private Children's Homes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral answer of 25 October, Official Report, column 749, how many (a) qualified field social workers, (b) unqualified field social workers, (c) qualified residential social workers and (d) unqualified residential social workers there were in 1974; and what are the latest available figures.

Mr. Bowis: There have been changes of definition and coverage in the information on qualifications of social work staff since 1974, and although the Department collected data on qualifications of social work staff in 1974, it no longer does so. It is for that reason that I quoted percentage figures rather than numbers.

In the 1974 Department of Health staffing return on local authority social services staff, 5,150 field social work staff out of a total of 13,154 or 38 per cent. were reported as having the Certificate of Qualification in Social Work. In 1992, the latest date for which the information is available, the local government management board social services work force analysis showed that, out of a total of 32,826 staff, 26,906, or 82 per cent., had CQSW and a further 3,415, or 10 per cent., had another relevant qualification such as certificate in social service or diploma in social work.

Corresponding comparative figures for staff in residential establishments are not available.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchcliffe), of 25 October, Official Report, column 749, what information is being requested from local authorities about the placement of children in small unregistered children's homes; and from which date this information is to be requested.

Mr. Bowis: In the current year, figures are being collected about those small unregistered children's homes in which children looked after by a local authority were accommodated in the period 1 April to 30 September 1994. The information collected includes the home's facilities and the age, gender and maximum number of children who can be accommodated. As my reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield said, from now on—that is, from the next annual collection—the number of children placed will also be separately identifiable.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) of 25 October, Official Report, column 749, whether statutory inspections in future will apply to small unregistered children's homes.

Mr. Bowis: Section 80 of the Children Act 1989 allows the social services inspectorate to inspect facilities for children in a wide variety of settings, including small children's homes, if circumstances show that it is necessary.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral answer of 25 October, Official Report, column 748, what are the welfare responsibilities of those authorities in whose areas small unregistered children's homes are located with regard to those homes; and under which section of the Children Act 1989 those welfare regulations are laid down.

Mr. Bowis: The local authority which places the child carries full responsibility to satisfy itself that the proposed placement promotes and safeguards the child's welfare—Arrangements for Placements of Children (General) Regulations 1991.

If a particular placing authority finds a small children's home unsatisfactory, its recourse would be to terminate that placement and not use the home again.

Authorities placing children in homes in a different area must inform the area authority about the placement—Arrangements for Placements of Children (General) Regulations 1992. Where a local authority has reasonable cause to suspect that a child who lives in its area is suffering, or likely to suffer, significant harm, it shall make inquiries to determine whether to take action to safeguard or promote the child's welfare—section 47, Children Act 1989.

Where an arrangement has been made with the placing authority, the area authority can carry out the functions in relation to a placement on behalf of the placing authority—Arrangements for Placements of Children (General) Regulations 1991.

NHS Hospitals (Car Parking)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish a maximum charge for car parking in NHS hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: No.

Health Service Workers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the British Medical Association and the Royal College of Nursing on the subject of the local determination of pay and conditions of service; what has been the nature of such representations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Discussions have taken place with both the nursing and medical professions and are continuing.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out the Government guidelines for the setting up and staffing of private nursing homes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Statutory control of nursing homes is provided by the Registered Homes Act 1984. Registration and inspection is wholly delegated to health authorities, and the Department of Health endorsed guidance published by the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts in 1985. Homes have a statutory duty to provide adequate nursing and other staff bearing in mind the number, age, and condition of the people being cared for.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes she proposes to the cash limits and running costs limits for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for 1994–95.

Mr. Sackville: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XII, vote 6—Office of Population Censuses and Surveys—will be increased by £1,833,000 from £33,592,000 to £35,425,000 and the running costs limit by £1,515,000 from £48,991,000 to £50,506,000. This reflects the take up of £1,512,000 for running costs and £318,000 for capital under the end-year flexibility entitlements announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729-34. It also reflects a transfer of running costs provision of £3,000 from the Valuation Office for additional housing costs allowance and increased capital costs provision of £931,000 in the national health service central register for work on the Department of Health's existing number replacement project. The increase in capital costs will be met from within the existing resources of the Department of Health—class XII, vote 3—and will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Social Work

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decision she has reached on the selection of consultants to undertake work on the definition of standards of conduct and practice in social work.

Mr. Bowis: I am pleased to announce that two short separate projects have been commissioned. One is from Price Waterhouse Management Consultants, the other is a joint project by the National Institute for Social Work, North Down and Ards community trust and Eastern health and social services board, Northern Ireland. These two projects will examine the issues from different perspectives.

The result of both projects will be reported to the Department of Health in the early months of next year.

Passive Smoking

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have contracted an illness caused by passive smoking in the workplace in each of the last five years.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

There is no information available on the number of people who have contracted an illness caused by passive smoking in the workplace.

EMPLOYMENT

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for 1922–93 and 1993–94, the amount spent in each London borough, with totals for each training and enterprise council area, under each of the programmes now incorporated into the single regeneration budget, regardless of whether the sums were paid to the borough council, and the amount allocated to be spent in 1994–95 on the same basis.

Mr. Paice: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on 27 October 1994, Official Report, column 813.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Miss Widdecombe: The answer to this question is not readily obtainable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the privatisations which his Department has promoted since 1979, indicating, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Miss Widdecombe: There have been two privatisations in the Department of Employment since 1979: the Professional and Executive Register in 1988 and the Skills Training Agency in 1990. Information relating to the proceeds from both sales is set out in the Department's appropriation accounts for 1989–90—PER—and 1990–91 to 1992–93—STA. The Department does not hold information relating to the current value of the companies involved.

Performance Agreements

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the target figure in the Employment Service performance agreements for the numbers of claimants to be referred for adjudication for the current year, in each of the last three years and the coming year; and how many in each case he estimates lost, or will lose, entitlement to benefit as a consequence.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 1 November 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about target figures in the Employment Service Annual Performance Agreement (APA) for the number of claimants referred to adjudication, and the number of claimants who lost, or will lose benefit as a result of referral.

We do not currently have, and never have had, a target in our APA for the overall number of submissions to adjudication. Our APA for 1994–95 contains a target of "135,000 submissions to adjudication where there is an arguable case with supporting information to show that the claimant is not available for, actively seeking or willing to accept work." This is the first APA to contain a target relating to the number of submissions to adjudication.

I am currently negotiating our APA for 1995–96 with officials in the Employment Department acting on behalf of the Secretary of State. It is too early in these negotiations to confirm whether it will include a target relating to the level of adjudication referrals, or what that level might be.

The information you have requested on the number of decisions and disallowances is not fully available. However, the attached tables give details of the number of decisions and disallowances for the four questions covered by our APA target; availability for employment, restricted availability, actively seeking employment and refusal of employment. The data relates to the past three years and for the quarter ending 30 June. More recent information is not currently available.

Employment and Training Programmes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will break down into convenient categories the 1·5 million opportunities on employmnet and training programmes whcih will be available tto unemployed people in the current financial year, giving the number of places available in each category.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delgated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 1 November 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the opportunities on employment and training programmes which will be available to unemployed people in the current financial year. These are as follows:

	Number
Access to Work	10,000
Career Development Loans	35,000
Community Action	50,000
Employment Rehabilitation	10,400
Jobclub	265,000
Jobfinders' Grants	4,400
Job Interview Guarantee	300,000
Jobplan	250,000
Job Review Workshop	40,000
Job search seminar	75,000
One to One	10,000
Restart Course	120,000
Training for Work	272,000
Travel to Interview	34,000
Workstart	1,200
Work Trials	20,000
Workwise/link	10,000
	1,507,000

Job Finder's Grant

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to publish a report on the trial testing of the job finder's grant.

Miss Widdecombe: Yes.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the area or areas in which the job finder's grant scheme is, or has been, tested, the numbers who have been given a grant and his best estimate of the take-up expressed as a percentage of those eligible to apply.

Miss Widdecombe: The job finder's grant pilots are operating in the east midlands and west midlands. Some 3,626 grants have been issued. Information regarding the take-up as a percentage of those eligible to apply is not available.

Job Seeker's Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there is any power proposed in the White Paper, "Jobseeker's Allowance," to compel a benefit claimant to undertake community or public work in return for the standard benefit to which he or she would be otherwise entitled; and in what circumstances it could be used.

Miss Widdecombe: As the White Paper explains, people receiving job seeker's allowance may be required to undertake activities designed to increase their employability and their chances of finding a job. Where it is appropriate, this may include a period of work experience on a community project. Participants in community action currently receive an allowance equivalent to their benefit entitlement plus £10.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the difference between, and define, the official recommendation and the job seeker's direction as referred to in the White Paper, "Jobseeker's Allowance".

Miss Widdecombe: Current legislation provides that a claimant can be disqualified from receiving benefit if he fails to carry out an official recommendation given to him by an Employment Service adviser with a view to assisting him to find a particular type of employment. That power would be carried forward into job seeker's allowance but widened to enable advisers additionally to direct job seekers to improve their employability through, for example, attending a course to improve job-seeking skills or motivation, or taking steps to present themselves acceptably to employers.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the sanctions that will be available to his Department when the proposals in the White Paper, "Jobseeker's Allowance", are implemented which are presently not available; and if he will define the circumstances in which these can be used.

Miss Widdecombe: The White Paper explains that the main system of sanctions in the jobseeker's allowance would generally take forward provisions from unemployment benefit and income support. The benefit sanctions for leaving a job voluntarily without just cause, losing a job through misconduct, neglecting to avail oneself of a reasonable opportunity of a job and refusing a job without good cause would continue to last for up to 26 weeks. The sanction for refusing to attend or complete mandatory courses such as jobplan workshops and prescribed training courses, and for failing to act upon a job seeker's direction, would be for a fixed period of two weeks, rising to four weeks if refusal or failure to act is repeated.

North Norfolk Action Scheme

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to publish a report on the north Norfolk action scheme, including an assessment of the effectiveness of the approach and the costs of the scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Yes.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 391.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Miss Widdecombe: No further appointments have been made since the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 12 January 1994, Official Report, column 216.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is given in "Public Bodies 1993" which is available in the Library. 1994 figures are still being collected and will be announced in due course.

Benzene

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to study the health risk of benzene in garages and workplaces.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 31 October 1994]: The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 require benzene exposure to be reduced so far as is reasonably practicable and in any case below the maximum exposure limit. The Health and Safety Executive plans to reassess the control of exposure to benzene in the workplace and aims to report by the end of 1995.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the services provided by the regional laboratories of the Health and Safety Executive are being contracted out; and what consideration he gave to allowing those laboratories, individually or collectively, to be market tested.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 31 October 1994]: The Health and Safety Executive decided to include the regional laboratories in its "Competing for Quality" programme for 1994–95 to seek improvements in value for money from these services. Careful consideration was given to how the laboratories should be treated under the programme. HSE concluded that a bid from the staff in the laboratories, acting on their own account, would not be viable.

Jobcentres

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on the advertising of jobs at jobcentres where firms wish to place age restrictions upon applicants.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 31 October 1994]: Where this occurs, the Employment Service tries to persuade employers to consider job seekers on their merits. The ES has produced a leaflet, "What's Age got to do with it?", designed to persuade employers not to impose upper age limits. If an employer insists on setting a limit, the vacancy will still be advertised. However, this would not prevent ES staff from approaching an employer on behalf of an otherwise suitable job seeker who falls outside the limit stated.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what levels of part-time earnings make job seekers ineligible for consideration under the job interview guarantee scheme; and what plans he has to change the current arrangements.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 31 October 1994]: The basic eligibility condition for the job interview guarantee scheme is that a job seeker must be unemployed for at least 26 weeks, and be in receipt of benefit. The level of part-time earnings in respect of unemployment benefit, and the number of hours worked in respect of income support, can affect a job seeker's entitlement to benefit. This would also affect his eligibility for JIG in the following circumstances:

> a client loses entitlement to UB for a day he works and earns more than £2·00, or for a week where he earns more than £57 in that week.
> a client loses entitlement to IS for a week in which he works for more than 16 hours.

There are no plans to change the programme eligibility for JIG or, in the short term, benefit entitlement conditions. There are, however, proposals to change benefit rules from April 1996. Information about the jobseeker's allowance was announced to Parliament on 24 October.

Self-Employed Workers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria he uses for categorising self-employed workers as being part-time; when this criteria was last changed; and when he plans to alter it in the future.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 31 October 1994]: Information on the number of self-employed workers is collected from the quarterly labour force survey. As with all LFS questions, the categorisation of full or part-time is based on the self-classification of the respondent.

Although the methodology used to estimate the numbers of self-employed was refined in April 1994, this did not effect the criteria for categorising part-time workers which has, since its inception in 1979, been based on self-classification from the LFS. There are no plans to alter this method in the future.

Coal Industry

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment at how many deep coal mines in the United Kingdom the refuge holes required under section 40 of the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 and regulation 59 of the Shafts Outlets and Roads Regulations have not been excavated; and if he will list the mines.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The legal requirement relating to the provision of refuge holes is absolute and no mine has been granted an exemption from providing refuge holes.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) on what grounds managers of certain deep coal mines have been given a derogation from their liabilities to cause refuge holes to be excavated; and who gave authority for the derogation;

(2) what is the total number of refuge holes that must now be excavated following the derogation given to managers at certain deep coal mines; and if this work will be completed prior to privatisation.

Mr. Oppeneheim [holding answer 28 October 1994]: No manager of a deep coal mine has been given derogation from the provision of refuge holes in roadways.

PRIME MINISTER

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister how many people there were in employment (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in Scotland and (c) in the Clydebank and Milngavie constituency in September in each year since 1979; how many of these jobs were (i) full-time or (ii) part-time; and how many were filled by (1) men and (2) women.

The Prime Minister: The information requested at (a) and (b) is available for all years since 1979 and can be obtained from the Library of the House. Constituency information is available only for September of 1984, 1987, 1989 and 1991.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest information available to him about health and malnutrition conditions at the present time in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates.

The Prime Minister: In addition to information from non-governmental organisations we receive reports from United Nations agencies. Copies of the most recent report from the office of the United Nations co-ordinator in Baghdad have been placed in both Libraries of the House.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 1 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 1 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what response he is making to the petition he received from Lord Attenborough and others on 19 October urging the provision of powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs for severely disabled people who cannot be independently mobile without them; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A reply has been sent to the Muscular Dystrophy Group to acknowledge the petition and explain our policy on the provision of wheelchairs for disabled people. I have passed the petition itself to the Department of Health. Health Ministers are, of course, aware of the "batteries not included" campaign.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), is currently studying the feasibility and affordability of a wheelchair voucher scheme and will announce his conclusions in due course.

Documents for Signature

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 619, if he will list the official documents, letters or accords that he has allowed photographic reproduction of his signature to appear on; and if he will list the official documents, letters or accords that he has signed which are written in a language that he does not understand.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 26 October, Official Report, column 619.

Mohamed Al Fayed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister when Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed requested a meeting with him; for what reasons he declined the request; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the statement I made to the House on standards of conduct in public life, on 25 October, Official Report, columns 775–70.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1 January 1985 Mr. Mohamed Al Fayed has visited 10 Downing street; and on what dates.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 October 1994]: Mr. Al Fayed visited No. 10 Downing street on the following occasions:

25 January 1985

(for the then Prime Minister's meeting with the Sulton of Brunei)

14 March 1985

(for the then Prime Minister's lunch for President Mubarak)

3 April 1985

(for a meeting with officials)

7 January 1986

(for a meeting with officials)

Correspondence

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 370, if his Office will now seek to obtain the full text of the letter from the Ritz hotel referred to in the correspondence between the Prime Minister and Mr. Peter Preston, editor of The Guardian.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to my previous answers on this subject.

Council of Europe

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Prime Minister, if he will place in the Library a copy of the information bulletin on the activities of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Open Government and Accountability

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Prime Minister what initiatives the Government has taken since November 1990 on open government and accountability.

The Prime Minister: The Government launched the citizens charter in July 1991. Information and openness are among its central principles.

The membership and terms of reference of ministerial Cabinet committees were published in May 1992, along with "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

In May 1992, I avowed for the first time the continuing existence of the secret intelligence service and named its chief. The Intelligence Services Act, which received royal assent in May 1994, puts both Government communications headquarters and the secret intelligence service on a statutory footing. A statutory oversight committee of parliamentarians for the security and intelligence services was also provided for.

The White paper on open government, published in July 1993, proposed the following measures:

> A code of practice on access to government information.
> Statutory access rights to personal records and health and safety information.
> Greater openness in access to public records.

The code of practice came into force in April 1994, providing for:

> Information to be volunteered by Government, such as facts and analysis with the policy decisions, and internal guidelines on dealing with the public.
> Government information to be released in response to specific requests.
> Reasons to be provided for administrative decisions.
> Enforcement by the Parliamentary Ombudsman, at no cost to the applicant.

A similar code of practice, covering the national health service, is currently the subject of consultation.

Over 24,000 records have been released since the open government initiatives began. These include almost 4,000 pieces of the intelligence material shown to Winston Churchill during the war—the so-called "Dir C Archive"; 840 pieces from the Special Operations Executive archive relating to SOE activities in the far east, Scandinavia, the middle east and Africa; previously withheld wartime Cabinet minutes; Admiralty intelligence papers; and War Office papers relating to the interrogation of prisoners-of-war.

A code of conduct has been issued to national health service boards, emphasising that high standards of corporate conduct and probity are at the heart of the NHS. Public registers of interests have been established.

A similar Treasury code of best practice for board members of other public bodies has also been promulgated. It recommends that all boards should establish a register of board members' interests.

As I announced to the House on 20 October, Official Report, column 421, a review of the system of appointments to public bodies is currently being carried out. The conclusions of the review will be made public, and will also be made available to the Nolan committee.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals there are to change the 1994–95 cash limit or running costs limit in respect of security and intelligence services.

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary token supplementary estimate, the cash limit for security and intelligence services, class XIX, vote 2 will be increased by £1,000 from £881,486,000 to £881487,000 and the gross running cost limit will be reduced by £2,361,000 from £449,850,000 to £447,489,000. This takes account of increased capital spending arising from the slippage of a building project and unforeseen capital and other purchases. These increases are being offset by increased receipts and reductions in both running costs and other current expenditure.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals there are to change the 1994–95 cash limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: other services vote.

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Cabinet Office: other services, class XIX, vote 1, will be increased by £1,452,000 from £43,381,000 to £44,833,000. At the same time, the running costs limit will be increased by £1,452,000 from £41,762,000 to £43,214,000.

The increase reflects the transfer of certain administrative functions and the move to repayment for some common service support as follows:

(a) transfer of running costs provision for certain Ministry of Defence property charges (Class I Vote 1) (£494,000);

(b) transfer of running costs provision for support to former Prime Ministers (Class VIII, Vote 3) (£163,000);

(c) transfer of running costs provision for central services (Class XVII, Vote 1) (£80,000); and

(d) transfer of provision for the calculation of the average property price list (£3,000).

In addition, as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–734, this vote is eligible for a cash limit increase of £721,000 in respect of end year flexibility arrangements for running costs expenditure. This supplementary estimate gives effect to the increase. All the increases are either offset by inter-departmental transfers or have been charged to the reverse and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

EDUCATION

National Targets Initiative

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the key objectives being sought under the national education and training targets initiative.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The national targets for education and training aim to help improve Britain's competitiveness by raising expectations of what young people and adults can achieve at school, college and at work.

Schools (Cornwall)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the level of capital expenditure approved for schools in Cornwall.

Mr. Robin Squire: Cornwalls' allocation for capital for 1994–95 is £1·744 million. With regard to bids for 1995–96, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Sir D. Madel).

Student Grants

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the effect on the welfare of student of the reduction in the worth in real terms of student grant.

Mr. Boswell: Since 1990, the total resources available to students through grant and student loan have been uprated annually by the rate of inflation estimated at the time, thus maintaining their value in real terms. Additionally, access funds are available for students who are in particular financial difficulties.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions she has had with teachers' unions concerning pay levels in the profession.

Mr. Robin Squire: Teachers' pay is a matter for the school teachers pay review body which is in the process of taking evidence from interested parties including the teacher unions and the Government.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 24 October, Official Report, columns 416–17, if she will provide a table showing (a) the cost of teacher salaries by local education authority and (b) the cost of implementing the school teachers pay and conditions document 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: Teachers' pay costs by LEA in 1992–93 are shown in the table. Figures for 1993–94, which will include the effect of the 1993 teachers' pay award, are not yet available.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 24 October, Official Report, columns 416-17, what additional funds her Department has made available to meet the cost of teacher salary re-assessment.

Mr. Robin Squire: Education's share of the 1993–94 local authority grant settlement was £16·8 billion, 2·6 per cent. higher than the comparable figure for the previous year. It was for local authorities to decide how to meet the cost of the 1993 teachers' pay award from within this total.

School Inspectors

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to recruit lay inspectors of schools.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Woodhead to write to my right hon. Friend.

Higher Education Institutions (Accountability)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures she is taking to ensure proper accountability of the use of public money by higher education institutions.

Mr. Boswell: The Higher Education Funding Council for England is responsible for allocating public funds to individual higher education institutions in England. Institutions are required to ensure that the funds they receive are used in accordance with the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, a financial memorandum with the council and any other conditions that the council prescribe. They provide audited financial statements to the council annually and their books and records are open to inspection by the Comptroller and Auditor General.

University Degrees

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to ensure uniformity in the standards of degrees between universities.

Mr. Boswell: The central responsibility for the quality of education and the standard of degrees rests with the universities themselves, acting individually and also collectively through the higher education quality council. My right hon. Friend has made clear the importance that she places on this responsibility, and has welcomed evidence that it is being taken ever more seriously.

Specialisms (Schools)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what support she proposes to give to those schools that wish to develop a specialism in music, art, languages or other areas of the curriculum.

Mr. Forth: As part of our commitment to increasing choice and diversity in education, we want to encourage schools to specialise in particular subjects. We have already introduced the successful technology colleges programme to support schools which wish to specialise in technology, science and mathematics. We hope to extend this principle in due course to other areas of the curriculum.

Nursery Education

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to improve the funding available for nursery education.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is now consulting widely a range of interests in pre-school education with a view to drawing up detailed proposals on how to achieve the target for expansion of pre-school provision set by the Prime Minister. The need for additional funding will be determined as part of the development of these proposals.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the percentage of three and four-year-old children receiving full-time nursery provision.

Mr. Forth: At January 1994, 3 per cent. of three and four-year-olds attended nursery classes full-time and 24 per cent. attended such classes part-time. A further 25 per cent. of this age group were in attendance at other infant classes, 23 per cent. full-time and 2 per cent. part-time.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when she expects to announce details for further provision of nursery education; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Prime Minister recently reaffirmed the Government's firm commitment to pre-school education. He set a target to provide, over time, a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish them to take it up. My right hon. Friend is now consulting widely with a view to drawing up detailed proposals on the expansion. She will make an announcement as soon as practicable.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the latest estimate she has of the amount of money being tied up in maintaining surplus school places; and what steps she is taking to reduce the number of surplus places.

Mr. Robin Squire: We estimate the direct costs of maintaining current surplus places—not all of which is in practice removable—as being some £240 million. We announced in June our intention to set targets for those authorities with particularly high levels of removable capacity.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received regarding the Student Loans Company Ltd.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend receives a variety of representations about the Student Loans Company from time to time.

Sport

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she intends to take to ensure that all children aged between five and 16 years play competitive sports in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: Competitive sports are an important part of a balanced physical education curriculum. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education has announced that she will be accepting in full Sir Ron Dearing's recommendations on the new national curriculum. The new curriculum for physical education, which will be published shortly, will require all children aged five to 16 to pursue competitive games—starting with learning the skills of competitive games, right through to playing the full recognised version of a competitive game.

Parental Choice

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the most accurate assessment she can make of (a) the number of parents who secure for their children their first choice of nursery, primary and secondary schools and (b) the satisfaction of parents about the current systems for choosing nursery, primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally. The most recent evidence—from surveys commissioned by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities in 1992 and The Times newspaper in 1993—shows that some 90 per cent. of parents gain a place for their child at their first choice of school. Circular 6/93 stressed that schools' admission arrangements should be clear and objective, and gave parents a clear indication of their chances of gaining a place for their child at a particular school.

Student Finance

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the number of potential students in further or higher education who have been or are deterred from undertaking or completing a course for financial reasons.

Mr. Boswell: There are record numbers of students in further and higher education. This does not suggest that potential students are being deterred. Some students will inevitably fail to complete their courses for a variety of reasons but wastage rates in higher education have remained broadly steady for a number of years.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has received on the financial hardship experienced by students in receipt of student loans; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about the adequacy of the student support system. It is not possible to say how many of them were about the position of students who have taken out student loans.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will retain the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: Yes.

School Buildings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her latest assessment of the fabric of school buildings.

Mr. Robin Squire: The fabric of school buildings in England is the responsibility of governors and local education authorities. The £600 million of Government support for school capital and repairs that has been made available in 1994–95, together with the additional input which local education authorities are able to make from their own resources, should enable them to make significant progress in improving the state of the school stock.

English in Schools

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what additional proposals she has for the study of English language in schools.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps she is taking to improve the standard of spoken and written English in schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has announced that she intends to accept in full Sir Ron Dearing's recommendations for the revised national curriculum. In English, there will be clear and more rigorous requirements for pupils to be taught written and spoken standard English, with a greater emphasis on grammar, spelling, and punctuation. For the first time, there will also be a requirement to pay proper attention to correct English across the curriculum. A full announcement will be made shortly and the revised curriculum will be implemented in September 1995 for five to 14-year-olds and from September 1996 for 14 to 16-year-olds.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many grant-maintained schools have applied to the Treasury for a loan;

(2) how many loans to grant-maintained schools have been approved by the Treasury;

(3) if she will list each grant-maintained school that has been granted Treasury loans and show how much each has been loaned;

(4) if she will list the grant-maintained schools which have repaid Treasury loans; and how much each school has repaid.

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the agency to write to the hon. Member.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost to her Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 387.

Beechwood Day Nursery, Coventry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what dates her Department asked Coventry social services to conduct an inspection of day care facilities at Beechwood day nursery in Coventry.

Mr. Robin Squire: My officials invited Coventry social services department on 15 July this year to visit Beechwood pre-prep independent school and report further on the provision made for children aged under five.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what date Coventry social services first raised concerns with her regarding Beechwood day nursery in Coventry.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department first became aware on 10 July 1992 of Coventry social services department's concerns about aspects of the nursery provision at this establishment. These were taken into account when the establishment was subsequently notified of the improvements required in order for final registration as an independent school to be granted.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what dates she received complaints from parents of children attending Beechwood day nursery.

Mr. Robin Squire: Only one such complaint has been received, on 12 May this year.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what date she registered Beechwood day nursery in Coventry.

Mr. Robin Squire: The establishment in question was provisionally registered on 6 August 1992 as an independent school as required by teh Education Act 1944, under the name of the Abacus pre-prep school. It changed its name to Beechwood pre-prep independent school on 26 September 1992. The Department has notified the school of the improvements required in order for final registration to be granted. We still await confirmation that these have been carried out.

School Buildings (Basildon)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action she is taking to restore the quality of school buildings in Basildon constructed in the 1960s.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for Essex LEAs to put forward for the schools they maintain the bids they judge necessary for consideration within the annual capital guidelines, or to use their own resources. It is for grant-maintained schools as they judge necessary, to put forward bids independently for consideration by the Funding Agency for Schools.

SCOTLAND

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hereditaments in Scotland whose rateable values will fall (a) below and (b) above the proposed £10,000 threshold for determining whether the lower limit on year-on-year increases in non-domestic rates bills applies, there are estimated to be whose rates bills for 1995–96 in the absence of any transitional relief would be (i) under 50 per cent., (ii) between 50 and 80 per cent., iii between 80 and 120 per cent., (iv) between 120 and 200 per cent., (v) between 200 and 500 per cent. and (vi) over 500 per cent. of their bills for 1994–95; and if he will estimate for each of those categories the aggregate increase or decrease in rates bills between the two years.

Mr. Stewart: The requested estimates depend on an assumption as to rate poundages and cannot therefore be provided until rate poundages have been set for Scotland for 1995–96. It is planned to announce 1995–96 rate poundages in December.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the regions, sectors and types of hereditament most affected by large increases or decreases in bills for non-domestic rates.

Mr. Stewart: The requested information depends on assumptions as to the progress made in introducing a unified business rate. It cannot therefore be provided until rate poundages have been set for Scotland for 1995–96. It is planned to announce 1995–96 rate poundages in December.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies he has commissioned, internally and from external consultants, of the likely impact of the April 1995 revaluation of non-domestic property on rateable values and non-domestic rate bills in different regions and different sectors of the economy; if he will publish those studies, or summary thereof; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Between February and July of this year, the Scottish Office employed the research organisation SIAS Ltd. to gather information from Scottish assessors giving the estimated effect of the 1995 revaluation on the rateable value and net annual value of a sample of about one in 10 non-domestic properties in Scotland. The sample was chosen to be representative of all regions of Scotland and of the main sectors, and was weighted to give greater coverage for larger subjects. Overall, subjects in the sample comprise some 42 per cent. of the 1994–95 rateable value of all subjects in the classes surveyed. In the last few weeks, assessors have supplied updated estimates for a number of these properties. The data obtained are still being analysed.

The information from the surveys will be used to inform decisions on rate poundages for Scotland for 1995–96, and transitional arrangements. No decision has been taken regarding eventual publication of the results of this survey.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the results of his consultations about the numbers of councillors in the proposed single-tier local authorities.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend will be announcing his decisions on the electoral wards to be used for the elections to the new single-tier councils shortly.

Cash and Running Costs Limits

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits and running costs provision for 1994–95 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make changes to eight voted cash limits, two non-voted cash blacks and five running costs limits:

a. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 3, training programmes, roads and transport services and industrial support, Scotland, will be increased by £4,248,000 from £872,404,000 to £876,652,000. The increase includes a transfer of £740,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry in respect of certain innovation and technology support schemes in Scotland and the take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement for Motorways and Trunk Roads, announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July (official Report Columns 729-734).

b. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 7, housing and environmental services, Scotland will be increased by £1,747,000 from £432,051,000 to £433,798,000. The increase takes account of a £1,979,000 increase in gross running cost provision for Historic Scotland from £12,725,000 to £14,704,000, reflecting the uptake of end-year flexibility entitlements and various inter-vote transfers representing transference of responsibility. It also takes account of an increase in provision for the Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland.

c. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 12, law, order, miscellaneous health and social work services, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £5,822,000 from £296,863,000 to £302,685,000. Provision for running costs on this vote has been increased by £2,676,000. The changes include the take-up of the end-year flexibility entitlement for the Scottish Prison Service, increasing Departmental running costs and capital provision by £2,656,000 and £359,000 respectively. Other changes include an increase in the capital provision of The Scottish Office Pensions Agency, for information technology investment; and an increase in provision for health education in Scotland, for publicity on measles and rubella vaccination. These changes will be offset by transfers from other votes.

d. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 14, hospitals, community health, family health (part) and other health services, Scotland, will be increased by a net total of £23,893,000 from £2,988,180,000 to £3,012,073,000. This increase takes account of this vote's end-year flexibility entitlements and various inter-vote and inter-departmental transfers including the Scottish contribution to the Prescription Pricing Authority's administration costs in connection with the assessment of claims under the Scottish Low Income Scheme and for NHS estate management consultancy; a transfer to cover the cost of services previously funded directly by the Department of Health; and a transfer to reflect a change in responsibility for the unlinked anonymous HIV testing programme. It also includes transfers to fund the Scottish Hospital Advisory Service and publicity in connection with the measles and rubella immunisation campaign; and for the capitalisation costs of pension arrangements entered into by the Scottish Ambulance Service. In addition there is a revision of NHS trusts' external financing limit and some adjustments between subheads to reflect revised requirements and changes to anticipated appropriations in aid.

e. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 17, education, arts and libraries, Scotland will be increased by £434,000 from £918,012,000 to £918,446,000. The increase reflects the full take-up of end-year flexibility for further education capital; an increase in provision for the Scottish mining Museum: and a transfer for the Student Awards Agency for Scotland, in respect of additional costs. This increase is partially offset by a transfers to OST as part of a national contribution towards a "Supercomputing: Class Three Time" project; and one in respect of prosthetic student fees.

f. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 21, Scottish Office Administration, will be increased by £470,000 from £168,264,000 to £168,734,000. Within this total, running cost provision increases by £459,000 arising from take-up of end-year flexibility predominantly to fund staff early departure costs, less inter-vote transfers. The capital provision reduction arises from a take-up of end-year flexibility less inter-vote transfers. Current provision increases to reflect a transfer from the Department of National Heritage, class XI, vote 6.

g. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 22, Scottish Record Office, will be increased by £1,513,000 from £7,514,000 to £9,027,000. Within this total, running cost provision increases by £438,000, £231,000 of which results from a take-up of end-year flexibility which will reduce the backlog of building maintenance and an intra-vote transfer of £207,000. The capital increase results from a take-up of end-year flexibility and a transfer from Scottish Office Administration which will offset new repository building costs arising in 1994–95 from earlier slippage.

h. The cash limit for class XIV, vote 23, will be increased by £544,000 from £5,450,000 to £5,994,000. The running cost provision increases by £307,000 due to take-up of end-year flexibility, necessary to continue to meet operational requirements. Capital end-year flexibility will enhance the continued development of the management information systems.

i. The non-voted cash limit SO/LA1, which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities, is to be increased by £12,004,000 from £610,212,000 to £622,216,000. This reflects full take-up of end-year flexibility together with a transfer from residential accommodation to secure accommodation within class XVI, vote 12.

j. The non-voted cash limit SO/LA2 which covers housing capital expenditure by local authorities and capital expenditure by New Towns will be increased by £13,215,000 from £262,992,000 to £276,207,000. The increase reflects the full take-up of end-year flexibility entitlement.

k. The overall running cost limit for the Scottish Office together with its Agencies will be increased by £5,212,000 from £330,676,000 to £335,890,000. This results from take-up of end-year flexibility, increased cost provision arising from increased income by Historic Scotland less a reduction for Common Police Services within vote 12. In addition this running cost limit of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland in its first year is £2,699,000.

The increases will be offset by savings on other votes within my responsibility, transfers from other departments or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Abstraction Controls

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce his response to the comments received on the consultation paper, "Abstraction Controls: A System for Scotland".

Mr. Lang: There were 53 responses to the consultation paper, from a wide variety of bodies. Over half supported the introduction of enhanced controls, but a significant minority preferred the status quo. As with other consultation exercises, the comments are available to the public at the Scottish Office.

In the light of these comments, I have concluded that selective abstraction controls should be introduced in Scotland as envisaged in the consultation paper. Our proposals need however to be seen in the context of current EC developments on groundwater protection. Discussions with the Commission on groundwater protection measures are under way and the Council resolution agreed on 4 October urged the Commission to bring forward by mid-1995 proposals for the implementation of the action programme on groundwater agreed at The Hague in 1991. In the course of these discussions, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I will of course seek to ensure that the principles of subsidiarity are fully respected.

In these circumstances I have decided not to seek new powers over abstraction at this time. My intention none the less remains to introduce selective abstraction controls in Scotland. I will bring forward the necessary legislation in the light of progress on the action programme. In the meantime my officials will take forward with the interested parties various points arising from the responses to the consultation paper.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 October 1994]: Information on non-departmental public bodies and national health service bodies is published in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1993", copies of which are available in the Library. Information about any other appointments made by me, or which I approve, is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Law and Order (Peterhead)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the crime figures for cases processed through Peterhead sheriff court, by type, for each year since 1976.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The available information is set out in the table:

Group 3—Crimes of dishonesty
Group 4—Fire-raising, vandalism etc
Group 5—Other crimes
Group 6—Miscellaneous offences
Group 7—Motor vehicle offences

Kidney Patients

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the average waiting times for hospital treatment for patients who suffer from kidney stones, listed by year for the last five years by health board area.

Lord Douglas James Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The mean waiting times—days—for in-patient and day case admissions from the waiting list where the principal diagnosis was calculus of kidney and ureter are shown in the table for each health board of treatment for calendar years 1989–1993.

Land Ownership and Use

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much land, in hectares, was owned by (a) the North of Scotland hydro-electricity board and (b) the South of Scotland electricity board just prior to privatisation.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 October 1994]: Information about the area of land owned by the former NSHEB and SSEB, just prior to privatisation, is not held by my Department.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures the Scottish Office takes to ensure land is used productively in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The use to which land is put in Scotland is generally for the landowner to determine, within any constraints that may be imposed by wide-ranging legislation. The United Kingdom strategy on sustainable development sets out the Government's agenda for using such land in productive but environmentally responsible ways, and the Scottish Office is committed to its implementation. The rolling review of national planning policy guidelines and development plans is a prime example of that commitment.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he ensures that land disposed of by the Scottish Office in Scotland has been put to productive use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 October 1994]: Revised guidance on the disposal of surplus land and buildings was circulated within the Scottish Office and associated Departments last year. This guidance establishes the principles and procedures to be followed when disposing of such assets. Before a property is offered for sale, officials must seek explicit advice on its development potential, and, where appropriate, secure outline planning permission for a suitable use. The sale may entail associated conditions. Within any such constraints, it is then for the new owner to consider subsequent use or development, and to obtain any necessary permissions from the appropriate planning authority. For its part, the authority is required to consider any proposals for development against the land use framework set by the approved development plan for its area, and any other material considerations.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new proposals he has to support and promote the Gaelic language.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 31 October 1994]: None, but I am currently considering a report on Gaelic education carried out by HM inspectorate.

Sight Tests

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS sight tests have been performed in each health board area in Scotland in each year since 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 October 1994]: The number of national health service sight tests paid for by health boards in each of the financial years since 1987 is shown in the table.

DEFENCE

Indonesia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Field Marshall Peter Inge last visited Indonesia; with which Indonesian ministers and officials he discussed the procurement of military equipment; which military equipment was specified; and when he expects contracts for such equipment to be signed.

Mr. Freeman: During his visit to Indonesia, from eight to 12 October this year, Field Marshal Inge met with President Suharto, the Commander in Chief of the Indonesian Armed Forces General Feisal Tanjung, and other senior military figures. Discussions covered a range of equipments and topics of mutual defence interest. Details of negotiations are commercially confidential between the customer and supplier, but export of military goods from the United Kingdom has been, and will continue to be, subject to export control, which takes into account defence and foreign policy.

Privatisation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the privatisations which his Department has promoted since 1979 showing, in each case, the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale, and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has completed only one full privatisation since 1979. The proceeds of the sale in 1987 of Royal Ordnance Factory, Leeds were £15·4 million and the gross receipts from the sale of the rest of royal ordnance were £190 million. Detailed figures are given in the NAO's report into the "Sale of Royal Ordnance plc (House of Commons Paper 162 1987–8 Session)". Current values of those companies are a matter for their present owners.

Territorial Army

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how recruits are to be accounted for in Territorial Army figures following the abolition of the recruits pool.

Mr. Soames: Territorial Army recruits will be held against the establishment of their parent unit.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Territorial Army recruits pool of 4,500 personnel is included in the 63,500 establishment figure.

Mr. Soames: The previous planned size of the Territorial Army of 63,500 included a margin of 4,500 to allow TA recruits to be held above the formed units' establishment of 59,000.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a recruits pool, as referred to in "Front Line First", was attached to the Territorial Army prior to 1992.

Mr. Soames: No.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Freeman: The current average cost of preparing an answer is assessed as £97 for a written question and £225 for an oral question.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United Kingdom organisations which have been engaged to assist with the cleansing of the Maralinga site, with reference to the exchange of notes between Her Majesty's Government and the Federal Government of Australia concerning the former United Kingdom nuclear test and experimental programme sites at Maralinga, the Monte Bello islands and Emu field, Cm. 2533; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The clean-up operation at the Maralinga site, and the appointment of organisations involved in it, are matters for the Australian Government. However, the Atomic Energy Authority Harwell has been retained by the Australian Government to act as health and safety advisors for the duration of the rehabilitation project.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent information Her Majesty's Government have received from the Federal Government of Australia regarding the implementation of the cleansing programme at the Maralinga site, with reference to the exchange of notes between Her Majesty's Government and the Federal Government of Australia concerning the former United Kingdom nuclear test and experimental programme sites at Maralinga, the Monte Bello islands and Emu field, Cm. 2533; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We understand that preliminary discussions have taken place regarding the appointment of British contractors.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been paid so far to the Government of Australia in relation to the cleaning up of the Maralinga test site under the exchange of notes between Her Majesty's Government and the Federal Government of Australia concerning the former United Kingdom nuclear test and experimental programme sites at Maralinga, the Monte Bello islands and Emu field, Cm. 2533; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: An initial payment of £5,000,000 was made to the Australian Government in December 1993;

£4,000,000 was paid in October 1994, leaving a balance of £11,000,000 to be paid in accordance with the exchange of notes.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the cleansing operation at the Maralinga site to be completed under the exchange of notes between Her Majesty's Government and the Federal Government of Australia concerning the former United Kingdom nuclear test and experimental programme sites at Maralinga, the Monte Bello islands and Emu field, Cm. 2533; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: That is a matter for the Australian Government.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what visits officials have recently paid to inspect the cleansing operation at the Maralinga site; if such officials and their federal Government counterparts have held discussions with representatives of the Aboriginal people living in the area in relation to the exchange of notes between Her Majesty's Government and the Federal Government of Australia concerning the former United Kingdom nuclear test and experimental programme sites at Maralinga, the Monte Bello islands and Emu field, Cm. 2533; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There have been no such visits or discussions by my officials. Both the operation itself and any discussions with representatives of the Aboriginal people are matters for the Australian Government.

European Armed Forces

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to whom allegiance will be given by British forces in the proposed (a) European Army and (b) Anglo-French or European air force.

Mr. Soames: We have no plans for a European army, or for a bi-national or European air force.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to discuss the pooling or merging of (a) some and (b) all of the RAF and the French air force for operations (i) outside and (ii) within continental Europe (1) at the next Franco-British summit and (2) on other occasions;

(2) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the proposal to merge (a) some and (b) all of the RAF and the French air force on an operational basis.

Mr. Soames: Discussions are taking place with French officials to identify ways in which British and French air forces may operate together more effectively outside the NATO area. That does not involve any merger of the air forces. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence intends to carry forward those exchanges at the forthcoming summit.

Defence Forces

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on current levels of the defence forces.

Mr. Soames: The current strength of the Armed Forces—as at 1 September 1994—is 246,926—Royal Navy 53,961; Army 120,058; Royal Air force 72,907. Our armed forces are manned, equipped and supported to enable them to meet their commitments as laid out in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1994".

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The percentage figure for such public appointments made by the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Northern Ireland court service was 27 per cent. as at 1 September 1993. This answer does not include judicial appointments.

The figures for 1994 are still being collated and will be announced in due course.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury, my right hon. Friend the Member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell), gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, Official Report, column 387.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No central records are kept of previous employment of persons appointed by the Lord Chancellor to non-departmental public bodies. It would therefore not be possible to give the detailed and comprehensive information sought by the question without incurring disproportionate cost.

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available. The Lord Chancellor's Department has 497 buildings on its estate and therefore the information could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

London Rail Connections

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for restoring the rail route facilities that permitted through services of trains from the former Great Western main line, at its junction with the Heathrow branch, with (a) King's Cross, (b) Liverpool Street and (c) Stratford, as part of his studies consequent on the report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution.

Mr. Watts: Any restoration of these rail routes is a commercial matter for Railtrack. The recommendations in the report of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution will be considered carefully.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimates he has made of (a) the passenger demand for an international station at Stratford and (b) the number of jobs likely to be created by such a development;

(2) what estimates he has made of the likely level of demand for travel between Ebbsfleet and Paris/Brussels, and of the approximate number of passengers expected to join each train calling at Ebbsfleet;

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of the construction of Ebbsfleet on nearby stations owned by Railtrack, and the effect of reduction in passengers using them on future levels of train services on the North Kent and Chatham lines;

(4) what analysis was carried out of the costs and benefits to passengers of constructing stations on the proposed high-speed rail link at (a) Stratford, (b) Rainham and (c) Ebbsfleet.

Mr. Watts: The assessment of each of the intermediate station options was based on studies undertaken by Union Railways and its consultants. Union Railways worked closely with the principal local authorities concerned and each of the promoter groups. The approach was to evaluate and compare outline designs, passenger demands, road traffic and highway impacts, associated developments, socio-economic impacts, environmental appraisals, cost/benefit analysis, contributions by third parties and safety considerations. Account was also taken of estimates of the impact of intermediate stations on nearby domestic stations and estimates of future levels of domestic services.

Some of the information in the assessment is commercially confidential. However, much is provided in Union Railways' October 1993 report to the Government, which was placed in the Library on 24 January 1994, together with a supporting report by the consultants Pieda plc, entitled "Intermediate Station Options: Socio-Economic and Development Impacts".

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations were received from the right hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Dame A. Rumbold) concerning the location of an intermediate station on the proposed high-speed rail link between London and the channel tunnel.

Dr. Mawhinney: No meetings were arranged by the Department of Transport between Ministers and the right hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Dame A. Rumbold).

Scotch Whisky (Transportation)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has received in connection with the proposed EC directive on the approximation of the laws of the member states with regard to the transport of dangerous goods by road, and by the Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road and Rail (Classification, Packaging and Labelling) Regulations 1994, as they may affect the transportation of Scotch whisky; what discussions he has held with his European counterparts on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My Department has had representations from the Scotch Whisky Association about the effect of the draft directive and the regulations on the carriage of whisky in casks over 250 litres capacity within Great Britain. My hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) has also made representations on behalf of the association. The Transport Council agreed a common position on the draft directive in June, and will discuss it again only if the European Parliament proposes further amendments. My officials have explained to the association how they propose, within the derogations permitted by the directive, to exempt the carriage of whisky within Britain in traditional-sized casks from the unintended requirements for design-type testing of the casks, so that existing practice can continue.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what strategic planning considerations he took into account when determining that there should be an international station at Ebbsfleet, together with associated urban development.

Mr. Watts: Strategic planning objectives for the south-east Region are set out in the Government's regional planning guidance published in March 1994—draft March 1993. The location of intermediate stations on the new channel tunnel rail link at Stratford, Rainham or Ebbsfleet would be consistent with the policy of encouraging future development in the east Thames corridor or Thames gateway. The scope for development, in terms of land availability close to the projected an additional station site, is greatest at Ebbsfleet. Ebbsfleet has been selected, but the opportunity for an additional station at Stratford remains open. The potential contribution which stations and associated developments at these locations could make to the future development of Thames gateway is set out in the more detailed guidance contained in the consultation draft of the Thames gateway planning framework published by the Department of the Environment on 7 September.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the company to be granted the concession to operate passenger trains on the channel tunnel rail link will also be given a concession to operate international passenger trains on the existing lines through the channel prior to the channel tunnel rail link coming into use.

Mr. J. Watts: The channel tunnel rail link promoter will be granted the ownership of European Passenger Services Ltd. which will be the operator of international passenger trains through the channel tunnel on the existing lines, as well as on the channel tunnel rail link when it comes into use.

Statistics

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current annual capital spending on (a) overground and underground railways and (b) national roads; what is (i) the number of passenger and vehicle occupant journeys and (ii) the distance travelled on (a) overground and underground railways and (b) national roads; and how much was spent on (a) overground and underground railways and (b) national roads (A) per passenger and vehicle occupant and (B) per mile travelled.

Mr. Watts: Information on journeys and passenger mileage is not available separately for national roads. The other information requested is given in the table.

European Passenger Services Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current capitalisation of European Passenger Services Ltd.

Mr. Watts: At 31 March 1994, the date of the latest audited accounts, the company had a capital value in terms of fixed assets of £928 million.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the valuation of assets transferred from the British Railways Board to European Passenger Services Ltd.; and what is the value of the liabilities attributable to British Rail's former European passenger services operating divisions that remain on the British Railways Board's balance sheet.

Mr. Watts: The net value of assets transferred from the BR Board to European Passenger Services were valued at approximately £818 million. The board retains certain contingent liabilities in respect of guarantees and indemnities which it had entered into when EPS was its subsidiary.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what communications he has had with the safety commission of the Channel Tunnel Intergovernmental Commission concerning use of the new Austrian tunnelling method in the channel tunnel's cross-over chambers.

Mr. Watts: The Channel Tunnel Intergovernmental Commission supervises all matters concerning the construction and operation of the tunnel on behalf of the United Kingdom and French Governments. It is advised by the independent channel tunnel safety authority. The safety authority carried out very careful checks of the tunnelling and support systems used in the channel tunnel, including the new Austrian tunnelling method, before advising the intergovernmental commission that it had no objection to their use.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what detailed arrangements have been made covering the Secretary of State's freehold interest in the channel tunnel, in the event of the formal liquidation, or insolvency of the concessionaires; and what equivalent arrangements have been made in respect of assets within the public domain in the Republic of France.

Mr. John Watts: In Britain the Government hold the freehold of the land on which the fixed link has been built. This land is leased to the concessionaires under the terms of the concession agreement. In the event of formal liquidation of the concessionaires the concession agreement states that the terms of those leases shall end. Similar arrangements in France are also covered by the concession agreement.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the proposed widening of the M25.

Mr. John Watts: This an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what representations he has received about the proposed widening of the M25.

A total of some 14,000 representations have been received in respect of the proposed widening of the M25 between junctions 5–7, 12–15, 15–16, 16–19 and 23–26 for which draft proposals have been published.

Marine Safety Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many ship inspectors are employed by the Marine Safety Agency; and what are his projections for the number employed in the financial years 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency currently employs 125 staff based in the marine offices, which deal mainly with the survey and certification of United Kingdom ships and the inspection of United Kingdom and foreign ships. Under current plans to meet the Department's efficiency gains proposals it is expected that by April 1996 there will be 117 such staff based in the marine offices.

Stockport Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the side orders on the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir Thomas Arnold, dated 2 November 1994:

Mr Watts, the Minister for Roads and Railways, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State regarding the A6(M) Stockport North-South bypass, as this is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

Railways

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the areas of rail transport policy about which Ministers in his Department answered parliamentary questions prior to the passage of the Railways Act 1993 but which are now regarded as either (a) matters of commercial confidentiality or (b) other matters about which answers will no longer be given.

Mr. Watts: There has been no change, since the passing of the Railways Act 1993, in the way in which matters of commercial confidentiality are defined. Ministers will not answer questions on issues now properly, the statutory responsibility of the regulator.

London Underground Ltd.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much capital spending London Underground Ltd. made in each of the past six years, excluding the fire-risk reduction cost following the King's Cross fire.

Mr. Norris: London Underground Ltd.'s capital investment expenditure on the core network, excluding fire safety works, over the last six years, was as follows:

	£ million outturn prices
1993–94	445
1992–93	590
1991–92	265
1990–91	310
1989–90	245
1988–89	200

Highways Agency

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the final date for consultation on the proposed restructuring of the Highways Agency; and when he expects to announce the results.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Faber, dated 2 November 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Railways has asked me to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the proposed restructuring of the Highways Agency.

Consultations with staff and trade unions on the restructuring are continuing and I expect to announce the Agency's future organisation later this month.

Plutonium Transport Review

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 October, Official Report, column 325, when he received the executive summary of the plutonium transport review; how the review report has been distributed; and if he will place copies of both the review and its executive summary in the Library.

Mr. Norris: The plutonium nitrate transport assessment done in 1984 was reviewed by the Atomic Energy Authority in 1993 in the light of updated criteria. The exercise was an internal one within the AEA for a specific purpose and a copy of the summary of the review was received by my Department, on request, on 19 October 1994. I am awaiting a copy of the full review. Copies of the summary and the review will be placed in the Library.

In response to those detailed points I would answer, using your paragraph letter, as follows:

(a) The Exchequer has so far spent around £6·7 million on the proposed BNRR.

(b) The setting up of the public inquiry currently in progress has cost the Department about £250,000 and there are running costs (including fees, hire charges etc.) of around £20,000 per week.

(c) It is no longer intended to take the inquiry to Hams Hall. Alternative arrangements have been made.

You also asked about the recovery of costs from Midland Expressway Limited. The detail of the cost sharing between MEL and the Department is commercially confidential.

(2) if he will obtain an estimate of the approximate additional percentage of paid passenger miles which would need to be travelled in order to reduce the general level of fares by (a) 10 per cent. (b) 20 per cent. and (c) 30 per cent., as part of his studies consequent on the report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 17 October, Official Report, column 97, if he will request Railtrack and the potential operators of the route from north Woolwich to Woolwich Arsenal to estimate the marginal cost of movement alone of three-car multiple-unit trains, subsequent to its re-electrification from Willesden junction to North Pole junction, as part of his studies consequent on the report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution;

(4) if he will estimate the marginal cost of movement by rail within the approximate area of Greater London per passenger mile, or other convenient unit, at weekends and public holidays, assuming no charge for standing charges, infrastructure costs, or any cost other than that of the direct movement costs of trains currently time-tabled on (a) the rail services of London Underground Ltd. and (b) the inner-London services operated over routes for which Railtrack is responsible, as part of his studies consequent on the report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. The monitoring committee for objective 3 will be considering proposals for allocating money to the non-Government sectors for 1995 and beyond later this month.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the credibility and effectiveness of the job interview guarantee scheme; and what plans he has to review it.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G Fogden to Mr. Peter Hardy, dated 2 November 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the credibility and effectiveness of the Job Interview Guarantee (JIG) Scheme.

The Scheme was first piloted in 20 inner city offices from September 1989. The pilots were reviewed during 1990 and found to be effective in helping long term unemployed and other disadvantaged clients into jobs. As a result JIG became a national programme from April 1991.

Since the original pilots, a survey was carried out in 1991–1992 by an independent organisation on behalf of the Employment Services (ES) of both JIG participants and employers who had used JIG. The findings showed that 92 per cent. of employers were positive about the service they had received from the jobcentre, 89 per cent. were satisfied with the people they had recruited and that some 40 per cent. had taken on a long term unemployed person for the first time.

For clients who had been found a job through the scheme, evidence showed that JIG had considerably increased their chance of being successful at interview and 60 per cent. were still in work.

So far this year, 46 per cent. of the people helped through JIG were placed into jobs.

A major evaluation of ES programmes and services which lead to jobs, including JIG, is currently in progress.

December marks the fifth anniversary of JIG. I am taking the opportunity to remind the people who deliver JIG in my local offices about the key features of what is one of our most effective programmes. The anniversary has been supported by re-designed publicity material and updated guidance for people in Jobcentres to help long term unemployed people and others at a disadvantage in the labour market to get back into work. Copies entitled "Job Interview Guarantee, Extra Help in filling your vacancies" and "Job Interview Guarantee, Extra Help to get you a job", have been placed in the Library. I hope this is helpful.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to (a) pilot test contracting out of the work of the Insolvency Service and (b) evaluate the pilot scheme prior to deciding whether to accept the recommendations of the Stoy Hayward report.

Mr. Heseltine: I have asked my officials to begin work on devising a specification which could be the subject of an invitation to tender to private sector contractors. They will be advised in this work by consultants. Only when that work is nearer completion would it be possible to decide whether there should be a pilot scheme and on the detail of evaluation criteria.

Any decision to contract out work of official receivers or to invite private sector contractors to bid for such work would be subject to the passage of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill currently before Parliament and the procedures applicable to contracting out which are set out in it including the requirement to consult with official receivers as statutory office holders.

Bus Services

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the companies currently running bus services in Worthing; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness and fairness of competition in this area with particular reference to Stagecoach and Cedar Buses.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Adur Valley Swift Line, Sussex Bus, Sussex Coastline Buses Ltd., and S H Martin trading as Access Cars have services registered to operate in Worthing. Under the competition legislation it is for the Director General of Fair Trading to keep under review the effectiveness of competition and take action if appropriate.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the companies currently running bus services in Hastings; what assessment he has made of the effectiveness and fairness of competition in this area; and if he will make a statement on the findings of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Bexhill Buses, Eastbourne Buses, Maidstone and District Motor Services Ltd., Rambler Coaches, and South Coast Buses Ltd. have services registered to operate in Hastings. Under the competition legislation it is for the Director General of Fair Trading to keep under review the effectiveness of competition and take action if appropriate. The acquisition by Stagecoach (Holdings) Ltd.—owners of South Coast Buses—of Formia Ltd. was referred in 1990 to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, which found that acquisition could be expected to lead to removal of competition, reductions in choice, service quality and frequency and higher fares. Stagecoach has since given undertakings on lines recommended by the MMC to remedy these adverse effects.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times Stagecoach South has been investigated by the Office of Fair Trading and by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; if he will give details of the results of the investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 31 October 1994]: The Director General of Fair Trading has conducted one Competition Act investigation involving what is now known as Stagecoach South—"An investigation under Section 3 of the Competition Act 1980 by the DGFT: Southdown Motor Service Ltd.—the registration and operation of services 242 and 262 in Bognor Regis". The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has also reported on this matter—"Southdown Motor Services Ltd.—a report on the conduct of Southdown Motor Services Ltd. in respect of its operations of local bus services on route 262 and 242 in Bognor Regis". The MMC has also reported on two mergers: Stagecoach/Portsmouth Citybus and Stagecoach/Formia Ltd.

Full details of the findings are given in the reports. Copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will conduct an investigation into alleged predatory pricing practices of Stagecoach, with particular reference to similar routes at different prices.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 31 October 1994]: It is for the Director General of Fair Trading to consider allegations of anti-competitive practices including predatory pricing.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the efficacy of the Office of Fair Trading in halting anti-competitive practices by bus companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 31 October 1994]: There is scope for increasing the effectiveness of UK competition law in general and the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill will do so. But my assessment is that action taken by the competition authorities to limit anti-competitive behaviour under existing law has been broadly effective.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the companies currently running bus services in Bognor; what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of competition in this area; if he is satisfied that competition is working effectively; and if he will make a statement on the findings of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 31 October 1994]: B. Hand and Sussex Coastline Buses Ltd. have services registered to operate in Bognor Regis. Under the competition legislation it is for the Director General of Fair Trading to keep under review the effectiveness of competition and take action if appropriate. The conduct of Southdown Motor Services Ltd.—now Sussex Coastline Buses Ltd.—in operating certain routes in Bognor Regis was referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1992. The MMC found that the anti-competitive conduct of Southdown on one route was the main cause of the withdrawal of a competitor. Sussex Coastline Buses has since given undertakings relating to the operation of this and adjoining routes.

Cuba

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 647, regarding the visit to Cuba of the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology, if he will place in the Library a copy of the bilateral investment promotion and protection agreement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: On 14 September 1994 I initialled the English text of a bilateral investment promotion and protection agreement with Cuba. The agreement is not yet signed. We are only awaiting a precisely matched Spanish text from the Cubans before proceeding to full signature and publication.

After signature of the text, the agreement will be presented to Parliament by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the normal way.

Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the former Minister for Corporate Affairs was party to the ministerial decision in respect of action on the report by DTI inspectors on alleged insider dealing by Lord Archer of Weston-super-Mare.

Mr. Heseltine: As Minister for Corporate Affairs, my hon. Friend was fully aware of all the issues involved. Reponsibility for the decision in this case was mine.

Hydrocarbons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects British standard 4434 and the relevant European standards to be finalised for hydrocarbon refrigerants; and if he will make a statement on progress so far.

Mr. Ian Taylor: A meeting of a BSI committee to discuss an amendment to BS4434 to permit the use of hydrocarbons in refrigeration systems was held on 13 October. A proposed amendment to EN60335-2-24, which is the safety standard for domestic electrical refrigerators, to permit the use of hydrocarbon refrigerants will be debated in CENELEC, the European electrical standards body, in December.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he considers refrigeration systems that avoid the use of hydrocarbons to be best practice and therefore eligible for inclusion in his Department's best practice programme or demos programme.

Mr. Ian Taylor: DEMOS—DTI's environmental management options scheme—is no longer open to applications for grant assistance.

The joint DTI/DOE environmental technology best practice programme, ETBPP, aims to promote better environmental performance and to increase the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry and commerce. Emphasis will be on waste minimisation and reducing pollution at source in the manufacturing process. In the selection of projects for inclusion in the programme, preference is given to those lying within the areas to which the programme is currently giving special attention. These areas are currently foundries, metal finishing/surface engineering and releases of volatile organic compounds. However, any project encompassing the use of cleaner technology can be considered for inclusion in the programme if it has sufficient merit and satisfies the announced selection criteria, including those relating to potential for stimulating national cost savings.

Those wishing to propose technologies and techniques to the programme should in the first instance contact the environmental helpline on 0800 585794.

Regional Challenge

Mr. Thomason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress is being made on regional challenge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Further to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's announcement of 21 July, Official Report, column 538, I shall be launching a round of consultation with a range of bodies in each of the eligible areas. A copy of the draft guidelines for regional challenge has been placed in the Library of the House. It is my intention that this special competition should encourage greater partnership between the public, private and voluntary sectors and take full advantage of the talents and expertise of the local community in addressing the problems of the eligible areas. I look forward to receiving a wide range of views as a part of this consultation process.

As a result of currency movements and adjustments to the financial tables of the single programming documents during their negotiatin with the European Commission, the £160 million announce by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 21 July now represents 12 per cent. of the money available from the European regional development fund in each eligible area, plus 10 per cent. of that sum from the European social fund.

Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations his Department has received from individual members of the public concerning the 16th round of offshore oil and gas licensing.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have received more than 2,300 postcards and more than 500 letters from members of the public making representations about future offshore licensing rounds. The 16th round was mentioned specifically in only a few of these cases.

Hong Kong

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to visit China; and if he will make a statement about the effect of the issue of Hong Kong on Sino-British commercial relations and prospects.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is hoping to visit China next year to promote our trade and commercial relations. We have no firm evidence that political differences with China over Hong Kong are having an effect on British commercial interests. Our exports to China rose by 72 per cent. in 1993, and by a further 21 per cent. in the first nine months of 1994; and the level of intended direct investment by British firms in China rose from £1 billion to £3 billion in 1993, which will make Britain one of the largest overseas investors there.

Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies with deficiencies of £500,000 or more were not investigated after receipt of an initial report highlighting misconduct under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 due to lack of resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many initial unfit conduct reports, pursuant to the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 have been received from (a) insolvency practitioners and (b) official receivers during each of the last three years; what was the source of each report; how many initial reports were rejected; and if he will give the reasons for rejection.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The number of unfit conduct returns/reports pursuant to the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 received and rejected during each of the three calendar years and the current year (to 31 October 1994) are as follows:

	1991	1992	1993	[1]1994
Insolvency practitioners
Received	3,479	4,144	4,093	2,726
Rejected	[2]—	2,888	3,322	1,864
Official receivers
Unfitted returns received	2,057	2,317	3,318	2,308
Unfitted reports	208	169	78	150
Rejected reports	26	29	19	12

[1] To date.

[2] Not known.

The main reasons for rejection were where the unfitted conduct alleged was not considered to be sufficiently serious or evidentially strong enough to justify disqualification proceedings in the public interest. Other reasons include cases where there was clear mitigation or where the case was linked to other proceedings which could result in disqualification or where the whereabouts of the directors were not known.

Contracting Out

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce primary legislation to facilitate the contracting out of parts of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The coming into force of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill, when enacted, will enable parliamentary approval to be sought for an order which will permit official receivers to contract out their functions.

I have no plans to introduce any further primary legislation in this regard.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effects of the proposals of Stoy Hayward on contracting out part of the functions and duties of the official receiver on the official receiver's statutory duty to investigate the affairs of bankrupts and companies in compulsory liquidation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Stoy Hayward Consulting reported that the contracting out of official receivers' case administration work would enable official receivers to concentrate more on their investigative role. I am satisfied that this would be so.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in his Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 October 1994]: In the past year, spouses of Ministers have travelled abroad at public expense six times. The total cost to public funds was £22,998.67. On three occasions in the past year spouses have travelled abroad at their own expense.

Spouses accompanied Ministers on the six occasions in order to take an active part in the official programme. Spouses' activities included attending official functions, as well as, for example, visits to education and welfare establishments.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowance

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the numbers of children who would receive the (a) higher rate and (b) the lower rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance if the age limit of five years was (i) removed altogether, (ii) reduced to age two and (iii) reduced to age three; and what is the estimate of the costs in each category;

(2) how many awards of the care component of the disability living allowance are currently payable in respect of children aged under five years at (a) the higher rate, (b) the middle rate and (c) the lower rate, by main disabling condition;

(3) how many claims for disability living allowance care component have been made in respect of children aged under five years since 1992; and how many were refused, giving figures for each reason for refusal.

Mr. Hague: The tables set out the best available estimates of the caseload and expenditure implications of changes to the lower age limit for claiming the mobility component of disability living allowance; and information on current awards of the care component of disability living allowance to children aged under five years. No information is available on the number of claims made in respect of the care component of disability living allowance, the number refused or the reasons for refusal.

Changes to age limit for DLA mobility component: estimated numbers of gainers 1994–95

Mobility component	Total abolition of age limit	Age limit reduced to age 2	Age limit reduced to age 3

Lower rate	10,000	8,000	6,000
Total	19,000	16,000	12,000

Note: These estimates are highly uncertain and subject to significant margins of error, therefore should be treated with extreme caution.

Changes to age limit for DLA mobility component: estimated additional costs 1994–95 (1994 prices)

Job Seeker's Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give his best estimate of the number of claimants who will be worse off at any one time as a result of the introduction of the job seeker's allowance and the reduction in the contributory benefit from 12 months to six months

Mr. Roger Evans: It is estimated that at any one time 250,000 unemployed claimants would no longer be entitled to an adult dependency increase, or would receive the lower personal allowance for claimants under 25, or would receive no or less benefit after six months. However, claimants in those groups may benefit from other measures outlined in the White Paper. A further group of claimants could either gain or lose a small amount depending on whether the personal rate of unemployment benefit would have been higher or lower than the personal allowance of income support in 1996–97 for claimants aged 25 or over. Since the uprating factors will depend on the increase in the Rossi and RPI indices in the year to September 1995, it is not possible to provide firm estimates of the effects at this stage.

Notes:

1. Estimates rounded to nearest 10,000 cases.

2. Estimates assume:

a) 2·55 million unemployed claimants;

b) 600,000 Unemployment benefit claimants.

3. Losers are estimated using the Policy simulation Model with 1990/91/92 Family Expenditure Survey data and 1994 Unemployment Benefit Statistics.

Income Support

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the definition of the term, "habitually resident", as stated in the new income support regulations.

Mr. Roger Evans: The term "habitually resident" is not defined in the regulations. When deciding whether a claimant is habitually resident, among the factors that the adjudication authorities may take into account are the length and continuity of his residence in another country; his employment record; his reasons and intentions for coming to the United Kingdom and factors which show where his centre of interest is situated. The concept of habitual residence is well established in United Kingdom and European Union law.

Children in Hospital

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what conditions must be met by families who face serious financial difficulties as a result of visiting their sick child in hospital to qualify for any financial assistance towards these costs from the social fund.

Mr. Roger Evans: Community care grants from the Social Fund can assist people in receipt of income support to meet the cost of visiting a hospital patient. Social fund officers have to take account of all the circumstances of each application to the fund, but the Secretary of State's guidance provides that help with costs to visit a child in hospital should normally be given high priority. Those payments are designed to ensure that help is focused on those with the lowest income who are least able to meet the cost.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many benefit penalties for non-co-operation with the Child Support Agency have now been imposed by Benefits Agency branch office.

Mr. Burt: From April 1993 to the end of August 1994, 4,850 cases have been considered for the implementation of a reduced benefit direction. Details of the number of cases in which benefit was reduced is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what powers are possessed by Child Support Agency officials to elicit financial information from those being pursued for payment; whether the agency is empowered to obtain copies of bank statements and other confidential financial information without permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Information, Evidence and Disclosure Regulations place parties to an assessment, and other specified persons, under a duty to furnish information or evidence required by the Secretary of State for one or more of the purposes listed in the regulations. That duty does not extend to banks or other financial institutions and a child support officer cannot therefore request information from them.

The Secretary of State may, however, appoint inspectors for the purpose of acquiring information under the Child Support Act 1991. Those inspectors are not bound by the Information, Evidence and Disclosure Regulations and may ask banks or other financial institutions for information.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Hague: This information is contained in "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Hague: None to those bodies listed in "Public Bodies 1993".

National Insurance

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect on Treasury revenue in 1995–96, and in a full year, of (a) raising the national insurance ceiling to the same level as the higher-rate tax band and (b) abolishing the ceiling for national insurance contributions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table:

1995–96 Additional Yield (£ million)

	Employees	Self-employed	Total
(a) In Year	1,000	50	1,050
Full Year	1,150	100	1,250
(b) In Year	3,000	200	3,200
Full Year	3,350	500	3,850

Note:

(1) The reply assumes that the upper earnings limit would remain in place at current levels for the purpose of calculating contracted-out rebates.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for 1994–95 or give the most recently available estimate of the number of (a) employees who pay national insurance contributions, (b) employees with earned income above the national contributions ceiling, (c) employees with earnings less than the income tax threshold who pay national insurance insurance contributions, (d) self-employed who pay class 4 national insurance contributions, (e) self-employed who pay class 2 national insurance contributions, (f) self-employed who pay class 3 national insurance contributions, (g) all self-employed paying national insurance contributions and (h) self-employed with profits above the upper profits limit for national insurance contributions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table:

(a) 18·1 million
(b) 3·2 million
(c) 0·5 million
(d) 1·6 million
(e) 2·4 million
(f) Reliable estimates are not available.
(g) In addition to those at (e) a number of self-employed earners pay Class 3 National Insurance Contributions (NICs) to make-up their contribution record or Class 1 NICs from concurrent employment as an employment earner. Reliable estimates of the numbers involved are not available.
(h) 0·35 million

Note:

Figures in the table (a-e) have been rounded to nearest 0·1 million.

Benefits

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were deprived of benefit as a sanction for breaking benefit rules (a) in the latest year for which figures are available and (b) in each of the preceding three years; and what in each case this total represented as a percentage of the total number receiving benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 2 November 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of claimants deprived of benefit and the percentage this represents of the total number receiving benefit. I have assumed that the claimants to which you refer are those in receipt of benefits being paid to unemployed people.

Unfortunately the statistics you asked for are not available in the form you have requested. Information on the number of adjudication officers' decisions and disallowance rates (in respect of unemployment benefit (UB) and opinions (in respect of Income Support (IS) is contained in a published document entitled "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions". This provides information on all the main entitlement questions arising on claims, including those which might be regarded as sanctions. Copies of this document are held in the Library of the House. The latest available information relates to the quarter ending June.

I am also unable to provide information on the total number of claimants receiving UB or IS during any particular period. The number of people receiving benefit during a period is constantly changing, and a simple count would include those who received benefit for only one day as well as those who received it for the whole period. It is possible therefore that a person would be included in such a count more than once. For these reasons statistics relating to the number of people who are claiming benefit at a given time are more meaningful. These are, as you know, regularly compiled and placed in the Library on a monthly basis.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many drug addicts were notified in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is given in table A3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of Drug Addicts notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom 1993"—area tables.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total amounts of money spent over the last five years by his Department on the prevention of drug abuse.

Mr. Richards: The following table gives the information requested as far as it is available. The figures shown are totals for the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse: it is not possible to disaggregate the amount spent on prevention of drug abuse.

Year	A £	B £
1989–90	[1]—	—
1990–91	[1]—	—

1992–93	298,129	43,275
1993–94	354,193	19,500

[1] Not available.

In addition to the sums in column A, the Department has made available the additional moneys shown in column B for specific prevention projects such as European drug prevention week and the Wales sixth form conference.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many drug addicts were newly notified in Wales in each of the past five years.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is given in table A1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of Drug Addicts notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom 1993"—area tables.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action his Department has taken to promote and mark European drug prevention week this year.

Mr. Richards: The Department undertook a range of actions to promote and mark European drug prevention week this year.

A comprehensive programme of events in Wales for European drug prevention week has been placed in the Library of the House.

Planning Inquiry, Oystermouth

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now publish his decision on the planning inquiry into the proposals at Oystermouth, Swansea.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Secretary of State has not yet issued his decision on the planning application of the development of the Oystermouth bus station site, Mumbles, Swansea. The decision is expected to issue very shortly.

National Curriculum

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce his decisions on recommendations for the revised national curriculum submitted to him by the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend and I are grateful for the extensive work that the authority has undertaken on the shape of its proposals. The result is a slimmer curriculum which meets Welsh needs, offers teachers more time to use at their discretion and gives schools an excellent platform from which to continue the work of raising educational standards. Accordingly, my right hon. Friend has accepted the authority's recommendations for the new subject orders. Proof copies will be issued in November and will be placed in the Library of the House.

Health Authorities

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has concluded his consideration of the future configuration of health authorities in Wales; and when a decision is likely to be released to the service.

Mr. Redwood: The extensive consultation exercise conducted by my Department revealed a broad consensus on the advantages of amalgamating district health authorities and family health services authorities. Opinion was much more divided on the geographical areas which merged authorities should cover.

In the light of the consultation responses, I believe that the health service in Wales will best be served by a reduction of DHAs and FHSAs from 17 to five. Subject to legislation, this will involve the merger of DHAs and FHSAs and the geographical amalgamation of certain areas also. My preferred option—based on option C in the consultation document—will involve the creation by 1 April 1996 of:

a North Wales Health Authority (Gwynedd and Clwyd);

a Mid and West Wales Health Authority (Powys and Dyfed); an enlarged Gwent Health Authority (including Caerphilly Unitary Authority area); an enlarged West Glamorgan Health Authority (including Bridgend Unitary Authority area); and a Mid and South Glamorgan Health Authority (comprising all of South Glamorgan and the remaining parts of the present Mid Glamorgan)

Recognising the strides already made by Pembrokeshire and East Dyfed health authorities to establish a West Wales Commission, those DHAs could be amalgamated formally in advance of the main reorganisation. I therefore propose to issue very shortly draft regulations for their amalgamation to form a single Dyfed health authority as from 1 April 1995.

My aim is:

to reduce expenditure on management and administrative costs in favour of spending on direct patient care;

to ensure that Health Authorities are in a position to perform all their roles and functions effectively ; and to ensure that Health Authority boundaries are compatible with those of the new Unitary Authority boundaries.

The reorganisation should result in significant savings, which I believe should exceed £3 million per year in the longer term, allowing more patients to be treated sooner. As it is envisaged that fewer staff will be required than at present, I expect health authorities to use natural wastage to run down their numbers. There will be full consideration and consultation.

I believe that the new health authorities should aim to pursue greater patient choice. Their task is to improve standards of care and treatment and provide effective stewardship of public resources.

I am writing today to the chairmen of the existing health authorities and family health service authorities informing them of the outcome of my deliberations. Having decided upon the future health authority structure in Wales, I hope to shortly announce my decision on the structure of community health councils in Wales.

Welsh Language

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to extend the official status of the Welsh language in European Union proceedings.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 October 1994]: Under article 217 of the treaty, the Council has to agree unanimously to approve a new official language. It has recently agreed that Finnish, Swedish, and Norwegian will be added as official languages subject to their entry. The Council has no plans to add any other languages.

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many public appointments (a) he is responsible for making and (b) require his approval, including those not listed in "Public Bodies"; and if he will give this figure in terms of (i) appointments to executive bodies, (ii) appointments to advisory bodies and (iii) other appointments.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 27 October 1994]: The details of the public appointments I make are given in "Appointments by the Secretary of State of Wales, 1 September 1994", copies are in the Library of the House. The figures are as follows:

	Number
Appointments to Executive Bodies	235
Advisory Bodies	170
Other Appointments	[1]403

[1] Of which 320 are to NHS bodies

I am also consulted on a number of appointments made by Ministers in charge of other Government Departments, but this information is not held centrally by the Welsh Office.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what proportion of the floor area of the Palace of Westminster is occupied by (a) the House of Commons and (b) the House of Lords.

Mr. Ray Powell: Of the usable floor space in the Palace of Westminster 58·3 per cent. is the responsibility of the House of Commons and 38·7 per cent. the responsibility of the House of Lords. Three per cent. of the Palace is under the joint control of the Speaker, the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Great Chamberlain.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The percentage of women appointments made by the Minister to those bodies listed in "Public Bodies" is 18 per cent. Figures for 1994 are still being collated and will be announced in due course.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Jack: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Gentleman of 6 July 1993, Official Report, column 110.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms animals have been shipped by ferry from (a) France, (b) Holland and (c) Belgium into the United Kingdom, in each of the past three months; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The information requested is not available. However, when consignments of animals are despatched from other member states notifications are sent via the Animo computer messaging system from the veterinary authorities of the countries of despatch. These notifications indicate that the following numbers of farm animals have been sent by all routes to Great Britain from the member states in question in the period July to September 1994:

		July			August			September
1994	France	Holland	Belgium	France	Holland	Belgium	France	Holland	Belgium

Poultry	56,330	6,720	25	70,250	24,999	—	63,064	8,552	31

Note:

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

Pigs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to assist pig producers in the United Kingdom between now and 1 January 1999 when new unilateral rule changes on sow stall and tether regulations take effect.

Mrs. Browning: This Department has contributed to the work of the pig welfare advisory group and financed the publication of a series of nine booklets on alternative systems of pig husbandry. These have been used at associated workshops run by ADAS. The Government also fund a programme of research into alternative systems.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the additional financial cost to United Kingdom pig producers of the unilateral rule changes on sow stall and tether regulations to be introduced on 1 January 1999; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The total cost to producers in Great Britain of complying with the phasing out of tethers and close confinement systems for sows has been estimated at £9 million. Further details are given in the compliance cost assessment, prepared for the Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House. The total cost to producers in Northern Ireland is estimated at £0·5 million.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to make the proposed United Kingdom changes in rules on sow stall and tether regulations applicable throughout the European Union.

Mrs. Browning: EC Directive 91/630 requires the European Commission to report, by 1 October 1997, on the welfare of pigs in different types of intensive system and to submit appropriate proposals to the Council. The United Kingdom will be pressing for this review to be undertaken at the earliest opportunity and for our own high standards to be adopted throughout the European Union.

Oyster Farms

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many of the oyster farming sites in England and Wales monitored for faecal coliforms achieved (a) classification A, (b) classification B or (c) classification C; how many were prohibited; what percentage of the total number of sites each represents; how many oyster farming sites in Holland and France are also monitored for faecal coliforms; what classification each site achieved; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many oyster farming sites in England and Wales are monitored for faecal coliforms under the shellfish hygiene regulations.

Mr. Jack: In England and Wales a total of 41 oyster production areas are monitored for faecal coliforms—E.Coli—under the Food Safety—Live Bivalve Molluscs and Other Shellfish—Regulations 1992. In these areas there are 63 groupings of beds, of which 12—19 per cent.—fall into class A, 39—62 per cent.—into class B, nine—14 per cent.—into class C, and three—5 per cent.—are prohibited.

All production areas in Holland and France are required by directive 91/492/EEC to be monitored. Information on the number of oyster farms classified in other EU member states is not generally available to us.

Whitland and Longridge Creameries

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he was informed that Dairy Crest intended to close its Whitland and Longridge creameries.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 31 October 1994]: The closures were a matter for the commercial judgement of Dairy Crest.

It is not my practice to reveal details concerning the receipt of commercially sensitive information.

Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether the members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee are required to declare their commercial and non-commercial interests;

(2) if he will publish the commercial and non-commercial interests of the members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 446, for what reason members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee are not required to provide details of consultancies held; and how this practice differs from that applied to other advisory committees for which he is responsible.

Mrs. Browning: Further to my written answer on 18 October about the commercial and non-commercial interests of members of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, the following information is now available from member, Dr. W. A. Watson:

Commercial interests

Name of company	Nature of interest
	Sheep farmer
Food and Agriculture organisation of the United Nations	Occasional consultancy work
Biotechnology and biological sciences research council	Occasional consultancy work

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of toxic waste was imported into Britain from abroad for disposal or reprocessing in 1991, 1992 and 1993; and what is the projected level for 1994.

Mr. Atkins: Imports of hazardous waste into Great Britain, notified under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988, were as set out in the table. In order that comparison may be made with previous years, the totals are expressed by financial year—1 April to 31 March.

Year	Tonnes
1990–91	44,542
1991–92	46,714
1992–93	45,942

Figures for imports notified in 1993–94 have not yet been published.

For further information, I refer the hon. Member to table 7.6 and paragraphs 7.9 to 7.12 of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 16, 1994 (HMSO)", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the draft list of hazardous wastes set out in the European Commission's proposal for a Council decision establishing a list of hazardous waste, pursuant to article 1(4) of Council directive 91/689/EEC on hazardous waste, Com (94)156 final, dated 21 September 1994.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my Department's explanatory memorandum on this document, which was deposited in the House Libraries on 27 October.

Green Belt

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce additional planning controls to protect the green belt in the centre of England in the areas affected by the expansion of the national exhibition centre, the expansion of the airport runway, the widening of the M42 and the development of housing under the unitary development plan; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: Stringent controls already exist to protect green belts from inappropriate development. Such development is only allowed in very special circumstances, while green belt boundaries can be altered only in exceptional circumstances. The revised version of planning policy guidance note 2 will maintain our commitment to green belts when it is published.

In the recently published draft regional planning guidance for the west midlands we confirm that there is no case for fundamental review of the green belts, which have served their purpose well and which will continue to do so.

Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he was first given a copy of the draft text of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution's 18th report, "Transport and the Environment", Cm 2674.

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend was sent a copy of the report the day before publication. My Department's officials received early drafts of parts of the report for factual comment earlier in the year.

Stockton Shopping Centre

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the proposed redevelopment of Stockton's shopping centre by the city challenge team is expected to commence.

Sir Paul Beresford: This is a matter for the Stockton city challenge partnership.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by his Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if he will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Sir Paul Beresford: Such information is not available centrally.

Development Corporations

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the total amount of urban block expenditure by his Department, (b) the total amount and percentage allocated to all urban development corporations and (c) the total amount and percentage allocated to the London Docklands development corporation for each year from 1987–88 to 1993–94.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is detailed in the table:

Waste Disposal

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many successful prosecutions have been undertaken by local waste authorities over the past three years.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Statistics relating to prosecutions undertaken by waste regulation authorities cannot be identified centrally.

The table shows the number of non-police prosecutions and convictions under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 and the Control of Pollution Act 1974 for certain waste-related offences in England and Wales in 1991, 1992 and 1993.

It should, however, be noted that the statistics of court proceedings are based on returns made by the police to the Home Office and although these include offences where there has been no police involvement, such as those prosecutions instigated by Government Departments, local authorities—in this case probably waste regulation authorities—and private organisations and individuals, the reporting of these types of offence is known to be incomplete.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on public appointments to non-departmental public bodies and nationalised industries for which the Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible is contained in "Public Bodies 1993", published by HMSO, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. This gives the percentage of all such appointments, for which this Department is responsible, held by women, as 22 per cent., at 1 September 1993. Similar information for 1994, to be published in "Public Bodies 1994", is currently being collected.

The information in "Public Bodies" includes the Commons Commissioners and valuation tribunals, for which the Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible but to which appointments are made by the Lord Chancellor and local authorities, respectively.

CFCs and Hydrofluorocarbons

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will support proposals circulated by the Dutch Government at the September meeting of the international negotiating committee—INC 10—to restrict the use of HFCs to applications where there are no viable alternatives to those HFCs with low global warming potential and to where leaks can be avoided.

Mr. Atkins: The document circulated at INC 10 was a report on the likely global warming effects of various HFC emissions control scenarios and, as such, was not a proposal by the Dutch Government. United Kingdom policy on HFCs is set out in sections 6.37 to 6.39 of the United Kingdom climate change programme, a copy of which is in the House Library.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress green Ministers have made in eliminating CFCs, HCFCs and HFCs from the Government estate.

Mr. Atkins: Green Ministers have encouraged the elimination of ozone-depleting substances and Departments have prepared action plans showing how they will reduce use and emissions of these substances,

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given to waste regulation authorities to ensure that they uphold the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 relating to the deliberate release of CFCs, HCFCs and HFCs; and what action he will take if this guidance is not acted upon.

Mr. Atkins: Guidance on the application of waste law to ozone-depleting substances is contained in paragraphs 4.95 to 4.103 of DOE circular November 94. I fully expect waste regulation authorities to act upon this guidance.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department has produced to help refrigeration engineers and technicians to assist in his policy of phasing out CFCs and HCFCs and limiting the use of HFCs.

Mr. Atkins: Guidance for the refrigeration industry is contained in the DTI publication, "Refrigeration and Air Conditioning. CFC Phaseout: Advice on Alternatives and Guidelines for Users." A second edition should be published by the end of November.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has held on the strategies for phasing out CFCs and HCFCs in refrigeration and limiting the use of HFCs with (a) ICI, (b) Calor Gas, (c) Sainsburys, (d) Tesco and (e) Iceland.

Mr. Atkins: My officials hold regular meetings with the refrigeration industry at which retailers and producers are represented. Discussions have also taken place with Calor Gas concerning hydrocarbon refrigerants. In addition, representatives of the refrigeration industry met my predecessor last year, and I shall be meeting them later this month.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to deposit in the Library all the submissions received on his Department's nuclear waste policy review.

Mr. Atkins: A list of submissions will be placed in the Library in due course.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring is undertaken of sites where low-level nuclear waste is deposited.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution regularly samples leachate or other local waters at sites authorised to receive low-level radioactive waste for controlled burial.

Details and results of the programme are given in HMIP's annual monitoring reports, copies of which are lodged in the Library.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the suitability, in terms of lining, soil conditions and proximity of water sources of Beddingham landfill site near Lewes for possible disposal of low-level nuclear waste.

Mr. Atkins: The suitability of the Beddingham landfill site to receive low-level radioactive waste, small quantities of which are sent only from Sussex university, was carefully assessed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution before an authorisation for disposal was granted.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what precautions are taken to ensure that low-level nuclear waste is not dispersed or misused.

Mr. Atkins: The accumulation and disposal of radioactive waste are regulated under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 and, as appropriate, under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will agree to the request by Lewes district council for a representative of his Department to attend a public meeting in Lewes to explain the proposals to allow the disposal of low-level nuclear waste on council landfill sites.

Mr. Atkins: Yes.

Water Disconnections

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of disconnections in water supply in the Rotherham metropolitan borough council area for each year since 1990 and so far in 1994.

Mr. Atkins: Data on disconnections by local authority district are not available centrally. The Director General of Water Services publishes data on disconnections twice a year, by water company area.

Climate Change

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he supports the comprehensive approach interpretation of the framework convention on climate change article 4 commitments.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom's response to the commitments in the framework convention on climate change is set out in our national programme under the convention, published in January. The programme sets out measures aimed at returning emissions of each of the main commitments contained in article 4.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in securing the voluntary controls on the release of HFCs described in section 6.38 of the Government's report "Climate Change: the United Kingdom Programme".

Mr. Atkins: My Department has held preliminary discussions with HFC producers and representatives of the aerosol, refrigeration, fire protection, solvents and foam manufacturing industries, to explore the scope for voluntary agreements to minimise emissions of HFCs.

Government Offices

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 38-40, what is the total cost of the refurbishment to properties at (a) Montrose house, Glasgow, (b) Station road, Kettering, (c) Lambert house, Talbot street, Nottingham, (d) Crown Building, 55 Norfolk street, Boston, (e) Crown Buildings, 1 Queen street, Wellingborough and (f) Ladywood house, 45-46 Stephenson street, Birmingham.

Sir Paul Beresford: (a) Montrose house, Glasgow—planning on this project has not yet started and, consequently, no figures are available;

(b) Station road, Kettering—this refurbishment and fit out for government occupation, including the provision of full disabled access, cost Government just under £40,000 plus VAT;

(c) Lambert house, Talbot street, Nottingham —refurbishment did not take place;

(d) Crown building, 55 Norfolk street, Boston—this scheme, which did not proceed, was designed to accommodate a Government Department expansion which, in the event, did not materialise;

(e) Crown building, 1 Queen street, Wellingborough—Employment Service, the occupant of this building, is dealing with the refurbishment and improvements, however, planning is at a very early stage and no costs are yet available;

(f) Ladywood house, Birmingham—the Department's landlords, at their own cost, paid about £2·75 million to refurbish Ladywood house.

Local Government

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the Local Government Commission's proposals for Cleveland would require joint arrangements between authorities and contracting of functions to maintain services;

(2) if he will make it his policy that any new authorities created as a result of local government reorganisation should be capable of directly providing the full range of public and support services within their own resources;

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect of the non-directly elected joint bodies requiring under the proposed local government reorganisation for Cleveland on local democracy.

Mr. Curry: Every local authority, existing or new, should be capable of securing the provision of the full range of services for which it is responsible. Except for the fire service, we do not consider that statutory joint authorities will be necessary for any local government functions in Cleveland following reorganisation. It is for the local authorities themselves to consider the most suitable means of service delivery, including whether voluntary joint arrangements or contracting out are desirable for particular functions. In any event, the elected local authorities will remain democratically accountable.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that all the proposed orders for new local government structures should be laid before the House (a) at the same time and (b) the conclusion of the entire review process.

Mr. Curry: No.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated number of jobs which the Local Government Commission has calculated would be lost if its proposals for the Cleveland area were implemented.

Mr. Curry: The Commission's financial estimates of costs and savings associated with reorganisation in Cleveland, which were made publicly available in November 1993, incorporated the assumption that 336 staff would become surplus if the present local government structure were replaced with four unitary authorities. The staffing levels of the authorities are, however, ultimately a matter for them.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that there should be fresh all-out elections to shadow authorities to supervise the changes in local government structures; and what consideration he has given to the creation of shadow authorities for the Cleveland area.

Mr. Curry: Our policy is that wherever possible there will be all-out elections to shadow unitary in the May preceding the April start-up date. In Cleveland all-out elections to the four district councils will take place in May 1995. The councillors who are elected then will plan for the transfer of functions from the county council to the districts and will continue at reorganisation in April 1996 as councillors of the unitary authorities.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will ensure that, in the current local government reorganisation exercise, a package of staff protection and compensation measure will be available which will be at least as comprehensive and beneficial to staff as the arrangements made available during the last two previous reorganisations;

(2) if he will make it his policy to create a mandatory national framework to maintain continuity of employment for those affected by changes in local government as a result of the local government review, together with full protection of pay and conditions of service; and if he will provide sufficient resources in addition to those required for the maintenance of services, to ensure that such protection is available for all of the affected employees

Mr. Curry: Protection of rights of employees upon transfer is already afforded by employment law and will not be affected by reorganisation. The Government will ensure a suitable package of staff protection and compensation measures for employees in local government affected by the current reorganisation. We have consulted on proposals for redundancy compensation and hope to make an announcement on other elements of the package in due course. Since local authorities will benefit from the savings arising from reorganisation, it is right that they should manage the transitional costs without additional resources from central Government.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy not to implement changes in local government structures which are likely to put jobs at risk.

Mr. Curry: No. Local government reorganisation is intended, among other things, to achieve greater efficiency and long-term savings in the cost of providing services. There will inevitably be some effect on staffing structures. The changing role of local government is bound to have implication for the skills and numbers in the local authority work force whether there is structural change or not.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Local Government Commission's proposals for Cleveland have been demonstrated to have the clear support of an absolute majority of the residents of that area.

Mr. Curry: The commission's final report on Cleveland, published in November 1993, included the results of opinion research which showed that a clear majority of local residents want change, and that the structure proposed by the commission is the most popular option for change.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what importance he attaches to public opinion as expressed in responses to the Local Government Commission's consultation period.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Local Government Act 1992 requires the Local Government Commission to have regard to the need to reflect the identities and interests of local communities, and to secure effective and convenient local government. Public opinion is one important test of this.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes were provided through the Housing Corporation in 1993–94; and how many he expects will be provided in 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: In 1993–94 the Housing Corporation provided 56,500 new lettings through its approved development programme. In estimates published in December 1993, the Housing Corporation indicates that on current plans it will be able to provide over 58,000 new lettings in 1994–95 and some 52,000 in 1995–96 through its ADP. Plans for 1995–96 and beyond are, of course, under consideration as part of the current public expenditure round.

In addition, 8,334 new lettings were provided in 1993–94 through the Housing Corporation funded by local authority housing association grant. The level of output from this programme in future years will depend on decisions taken by individual local authorities.

Cites

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has consulted fully with Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food over resolutions to be considered at the forthcoming conference of parties to the Convention on Trade in Endangered Species which may affect the convention's listing of marine mammals and fishes.

Sir Paul Beresford: Yes. We have consulted all other Departments with an interest in proposals and resolutions to be considered at the CITES conference, including the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Overseas Development Administration, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Forestry Commission.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects decisions to be announced on bids made to the single regeneration budget, with particular reference to those applications relating to education projects; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: We expect to announce decisions on bids for funding from the single regeneration budget, including bids involving education projects, in January 1995.

International Station, Ebbsfleet

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a map of the area covered by the approved urban development around the planned international station at Ebbsfleet showing ownership of principal areas of leasehold and freehold interests.

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on planning permissions and land ownership are not held centrally. Details of planning permissions which exist for development in the area around the site of the proposed international station at Ebbsfleet will be available from the planning registers of Dartford and Gravesham district councils. Records of land ownership are held by the Land Registry.

Planning Application, Whitechapel Moor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will decide whether to call in the planning application in respect of the leisure development at Whitechapel moor, South Molton, Devon.

Sir Paul Beresford: It is my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's policy to deal expeditiously with requests that he call in planning applications for his own determination. He expects to issue a decision shortly after North Devon district council has reached its conclusions on it.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes in circumstances occurred between 16 September and 21 October to cause the Secretary of State to require the local planning authority to resolve the planning application in respect of the leisure development at Whitechapel moor, South Molton, Devon.

Sir Paul Beresford: On 16 September my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State exercised his powers under article 14 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 and directed North Devon district council not to grant planning permission for a golf and leisure development at Whitechapel moor, South Molton, Devon. The direction was issued because the application would not otherwise be referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State as a departure from the development plan. In effect, the direction provides an opportunity to consider whether the application raises the type of issues which would justify call-in.

On 20 September the North Devon district council planning committee deferred making a decision on the application pending the outcome of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's decision on call-in. On 21 October the Government office for the south-west requested the council to resolve the planning application which remains before it and explained that it was important to know what the council's decision would be. If the application were refused, the substantial additional expense associated with a public inquiry would be avoided.

Move-to-buy Grant

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations are made to ensure that a housing association tenant who proposes to apply for the move-to-buy grant is able to meet his mortgage commitments; how much is the move-to-buy grant; whether a recipient of the move-to-buy grant whose property is subsequently repossessed is regarded as intentionally homeless; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The tenants incentive scheme is available to housing association tenants seeking to buy a home on the open market. Grants of between £8,000 and £16,000 are available, depending upon the geographical location of the property.

In applying for a TIS grant, tenants are required to declare details of their income and savings as part of their application, and housing associations are entitled to take this information into consideration as part of their assessment of the application.

In responding to an application under the homelessness legislation from a former HA tenant who is subsequently repossessed, a local authority will take account of all factors relevant to a particular case.

Nuclear Waste

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites which are currently used for the disposal of low-level nuclear waste.

Mr. Atkins: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what account will be taken of public opinion when the decision is made about the level of nuclear waste at the Milton tip;

(2) what plans he has to introduce further sites for the disposal of low-level nuclear waste in East Anglia;

(3) on what date he expects to publish the findings of his review of waste management disposal;

(4) when he will take a decision about the level of nuclear waste disposed of at the Milton landfill pit near Cambridge;

(5) what representations he has received on his plans to allow the dumping of low-level nuclear waste on council landfill sites;

(6) what further consultation he intends to carry out with the councils and the residents in the Lewes area before deciding whether Beddingham landfill site is to be approved as a site for the disposal of low-level nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: One of the proposals in the Department's consultation paper, "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", published in August, was that waste producers should be encouraged to make greater use of the controlled burial of low-level radioactive waste in landfill sites. The Department has received a large number of responses to the review, which are being given full consideration. A statement of future policy will be made in due course.

There are no proposals in relation to specific sites. However, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution consults the relevant waste regulatory authority, local councils and water undertakers, before issuing authorisations for controlled burial.

Waste Water

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has had with the European Commission under its urban waste water treatment directive for the classification of all waters south of the Humber bridge as coastline;

(2) what part the National Rivers Authority plays in classifying rivers and coastline for the purposes of the urban waste water treatment directive;

(3) what discussion he has had with Yorkshire Water Services Ltd. concerning the designation of the city of Hull as a coastal city for the purposes of the EC directive on urban waste water treatment;

(4) with whom he had discussions before the classification of all waters south of the Humber bridge as coastline;

(5) what estimates has his Department made of the savings in capital costs arising from the classification of Hull as a seaside resort for the purposes of the directive on urban waste water treatment.

Mr. Atkins: The EC's urban waste water treatment directive provides for waters to be identified according to their sensitivity to inter alia eutrophication—sensitive areas—or according to their natural dispersion characteristics—high dispersion areas. It also requires that the seaward limits of estuaries should be identified for the directive's purposes.

After public consultation on the criteria for the identification of sensitive areas and HNDAs, the NRA proposed that, for the purposes of this directive, the seaward limit of the Humber estuary be drawn at the Humber bridge and that the coastal area to the east of that be identified as an HNDA. The NRA advised the Department that no further environmental benefit will accrue from the provision of levels of sewage treatment in addition to the minimum requirements for HNDAs in the directive at the locations so identified.

Following discussions with English Nature and the water companies I announced on 18 May 1994 the identification of 33 sensitive areas and 58 HNDAs. These decisions were communicated to the European Commission.

The Director General of Water Services published on 28 July 1994 his estimate of £6 billion for the cost of implementation of the UWWTD in England and Wales. This estimate took account of the decisions taken on sensitive areas and HNDAs.

Water Prices

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage change in the price of water in each year since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The most complete available historical data on water charges from 1979 are contained in "Waterfacts" published annually by the Water Services Association, copies of which are available in the Library.

Bolton Council

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive a reply from Bolton council to his letter of 9 September, reference PNW/5080/147168.

Sir Paul Beresford: Bolton borough council has advised that if hopes to reply to that letter within a week.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether there is a connection between respiratory diseases and vehicle emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department takes advice from the Department of Health on the effects of pollutants on human health. The Government take very seriously evidence that high levels of some traffic-related pollutants can have adverse effects on those suffering from respiratory disorders. On 3 October 1994 my Department, the Department of Health and the Medical Research Council announced a £5 million research programme into links between air pollution and respiratory disease. I and my colleagues will further consider issues of air quality and public health when we discuss the terms of our response to the consultation paper on improving air quality. We intend to publish our proposals later this year.

Building Regulations

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from public and private representative bodies to amend the building regulations to reduce the danger of accidents from the collapse of freestanding masonry walls; and what proposals he has in response to amend or to institute some form of regulatory control.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Apart from a request from the hon. Member's own local authority at Swansea and from HM coroner for north Buckinghamshire, following an inquest into a tragic accident involving a young boy, the Government have received few representations calling for freestanding masonry walls to be brought under building regulation control.

Following its review earlier this year, the Government accepted the Building Regulations Advisory Committee recommendation that such walls should not be brought under statutory control. It was the committee's view that despite the tragic fatality cases reported, the health and safety risks associated with such walls are far less than for other hazards, such as those present in the home. The burden of control on enforcement authorities, industry and the public could not therefore be reconciled against such low risk of injury.

The Government are, however, committed to improving the safety of freestanding walls through their continued sponsorship of the development and dissemination of technical guidance on wall construction and maintenance. NHBC registered builders already have an obligation to observe such guidance.

In addition, the Government are encouraging local authorities to be vigilant in exercising their powers under sections 77 and 78 of the Building Act 1984 to remedy any dangerous walls.

Council Tax

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against banding remain outstanding in the London borough of Lambeth; and when he expects the appeals to be disposed of.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As at 30 September, 1,788 initial period banding appeals were outstanding in respect of dwellings in the London borough of Lambeth.

We expect four out of five initial appeal period appeals to be settled nationally before the end of this year. The remainder will be settled as soon as possible in 1995. I cannot estimate a date by which all such appeals will have been settled since a few may be affected by special factors, such as an appeal on a point of law to the High Court.

Zoos

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many exemptions have been granted in each county to establishments keeping animals from provisions of the Zoo Licensing Act in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement about the reasons for these exemptions in respect of the last year for which figures are available.

Sir Paul Beresford [pursuant to his reply, 20 October 1994, c. 292]: Between 1984 and 1991 the following exemptions from the provisions of the Zoo Licensing Act 1981 have been granted.

No exemptions have been granted in 1992 to 1994. Exemptions from the Act are granted to collections which consist entirely of animals which are normally domesticated in Great Britain. Establishments which have been granted exemptions are not considered to meet the definition of zoo within the meaning of the Act by virtue of the fact that wild animals are not being exhibited to the public.

EDUCATION

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, on how many occasions in the past year the spouse of a Minister in her Department has travelled abroad at public expense to accompany a Minister on public duties, and what has been the total cost to public funds; and on how many occasions such travel has been undertaken at own cost.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [pursuant to her reply, Official Report, 27 October 1994, c. 626]: There have been no occasions in the last year when the spouse of a Minister in the Department for Education has travelled abroad to accompany a Minister on public duties at public cost. On four occasions, a Minister was accompanied, but in no case was this at public cost.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action she is taking to maintain in schools the teaching of English to ethnic minority children currently funded under section 11; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: In addition to existing mainstream provision for them, initiatives to benefit minority ethnic pupils for whom English is not their first language are eligible for support from the single regeneration budget. Bids for that support in 1995–96 are currently under consideration. Support will also be available from the rersidual element of section 11 grant, for which my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has invited bids for next year.

Cash Limits

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes she has to announce to cash limits and running cost limits on votes within her responsibility for 1994–95.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limits for class X, vote 1, schools, research and miscellaneous services and vote 4, administration will be amended. The cash limit changes are as follows:

	Class and vote current cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
X.1	800,269,000	+ 3,527,000	803,796,000
X.4	93,032,000	+ 5,911,000	98,943,000

The increase on class X, vote 1 is in respect of the take up of the capital end-year flexibility entitlement of £3,538,000 announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729–34, offset by a contribution of £11,000 from the Welsh Office Education Department towards the funding of the special educational needs tribunal.

The increase on class X, vote 4 is in respect of the take-up of the end-year flexibility entitlements of £1,886,000 for capital and £4,021,000 for running costs as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 14 July 1994, Official Report, columns 729-34, and a transfer of £32,000 from the Public Services Agency, offset by a contribution of £28,000 from the Welsh Office.

Education Department towards the running costs of the special educational needs tribunal.

The running costs limit for the Department for Education will be increased by £4,053,000 from £90,347,000 to £94,400,000. This reflects take-up of the end-year flexibility entitlement and the transfer from the Public Services Agency.

The increases will be offset by transfers or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Nursery Education

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what educational effect she expects increased levels of nursery education to have over the next two years.

Mr. Robin Squire: Progress will be made in the lifetime of this Parliament towards implementation of the Government's firm commitment to make a pre-school place available for all four-year-olds whose parents wish to take it up. Good quality nursery education should lead to improved performance at key stage 1, and the beneficial effects should last well beyond that.

Travellers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the educational effect on gipsy and travellers' children of evictions under the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Robin Squire: The increased powers of eviction provided under the Bill are intended primarily to tackle the serious nuisance of mass trespass, raves and illegal camping. The draft circular of guidance recently issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has drawn attention to the need for local authorities to take particularly careful account of the effects of any evictions on the education of children. The guidance also draws attention to the need for alternative educational arrangements to be made in such circumstances, appropriate to the children's ages, abilities and aptitudes.

Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 25 October, what was the funding to the Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute by the Further Education Funding Council in 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Boswell: Funding of the Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute by the Further Education Funding Council was £20,974 in respect of the period April 1993 to July 1994, and £140,767 in respect of the period August 1994 to July 1995. This reflects the re-classification of some courses for English as a foreign language.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of public appointments made by her Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: In 1993, 27 per cent. of public appointments made by this Department were held by women. The 1994 figures are still being finalised and will be made available in due course.

Quangos

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which former hon. Members of this House have been appointed since 1988 by her Department to quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations; and if she will list, in each case, the title of the post, the salary, the duration of the appointment, and the party which each represented as an hon. Member.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is given as follows:

Name of member	NDPB and post held	Salary £ per annum	Duration of appointment	Political part
Mr. N. Bennett	Further Education Funding Council (England) Member of the Council	4,000 honorarium	3 years	Conservative
Mr. M. Fallon	Higher Education Funding Council (England) Member of the Council	4,000 honorarium	2·5 years	Conservativ

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Clock Adjustment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Attorney-General how many man hours were taken up by adjusting the clocks throughout his Department.

The Attorney-General: Adjusting clocks forms part of the normal day-to-day maintenance of my Department's buildings. No separate records are kept of the time spent on this.

Children (Legal Guardianship)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement regarding legal guardianship and adoption of children when one or both parents are deceased or no able to look after the child and when friends of the paren or parents act to adopt he child against the wishes of othe blood relatives of the child who may be surviving.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

Each case will be decided within the legal framewor and according to its individual circumstances.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what plans h has to review the law regarding legal guardianship o children by persons who are not related to the child whe grandparents willing to act as legal guardian and bring u the child are still alive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

There are no plans to review the law.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will review the law regarding access rights of grandparents with particular reference to cases where the child is the legal ward of people who are not related by blood or birth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The Children Act 1989 contains provisions under which grandparents can apply to the court for contact with their grandchild. These apply whether or not the child is living with its natural parents or with others. There are no plans to review these provisions.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Appointments

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many of those people currently holding public appointments hold more than one appointment; and if he will list those people and the appointments they hold;

(2) how many members of public bodies have been dismissed from office since 1979.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: This information is not held centrally.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many names on the public appointments unit list currently hold public appointments.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the Government accepted the recommendations of the 1989 review of public appointments procedures that all Departments should set a target for the percentage of women in public appointments by the end of 1994; and if he will give details of targets for each Department and of current performance against it.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Departmental plans and goals for the increased representation of women on public bodies were published on 16 November 1992. A summary of these is in the Library of the House. Details of progress toward these goals can be found in "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is also available in the Library of the House.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the public appointments which are made by Ministers are (a) full-time, (b) part-time, (c) paid, (d) unpaid, (e) full-time and paid, (f) part-time and paid, (g) full-time and unpaid and (h) part-time and unpaid.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the public appointments made in 1993–94 were public appointments unit nominees; and if he will list these appointments.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will bring forward proposals for a Freedom of Information Act.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: No. Current open government initiatives plus the further commitments set out in the White Paper on Open Government, Cm 2290, will provide a more practical alternative to freedom of information legislation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Badgers

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to amend the Protection of Badgers Act 1992 to allow police officers powers of entry on to private land.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We have no plans to do so.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of those who applied for asylum (a) since 26 July 1993 and (b) since 1 January 1994, and are liable to detention under paragraph 16(1) and 16(2) of schedule 2 and paragraph 2 of schedule 3 to the Immigration Act 1971 have been detained under these provisions.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: On 28 October 1994 a total of 702 people who had sought asylum were detained. This figure includes people awaiting the setting of directions for removal following refusal of the application, as well as those whose application was under consideration or subject to appeal. Of this figure, 332 were detained under paragraph 16(1) of schedule 2, 306 under paragraph 16(2) of schedule 2 and 64 under paragraph 2 of schedule 3 of the Immigration Act 1971. Information on the percentage of those applying for asylum since 26 July 1993 and 1 January 1994, who were detailed, is available only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been detained under the provisions of section 9 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 (a) since 26 July 1993 and (b) since 1 January 1994; and how many asylum seekers are currently detained under those provisions.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Section 9 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 refers to appeals from the immigration appeals tribunal. It has no provisions for the detection of asylum seekers, but at 31 October 1994 there was one case in detention awaiting the outcome of such an appeal.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently detained under the Immigration Act 1971; and how long, on average, those detainees have been held.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: On 28 October 1994 a total of 702 people who had sought asylum were detained. This figure includes people awaiting the setting of directions for removal following refusal of the application, as well as those whose application was under consideration or subject to appeal. Of this figure, 216 had been in detention less than one month, 118 between one and two months, 262 between two and six months and 106 had spent longer than six months in detention.

Police

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department what the actual establishment for the police was for each year since 1978 in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) the west midlands and (e) H division, Walsall.

Mr. Maclean: The information for England and Wales and the West Midlands police is set out in the table. The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. The setting of divisional establishments within the West Midlands police is for the chief constable to decide.

[2] Establishment as at 31 August 1994.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional police officers have been released to operational duties as a result of civilianisation in the past five years in each of the following areas: (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) the west midlands and (e) H division Walsall.

Mr. Maclean: Over the last five years—1989 to 1993—the following number of police officer posts have been civilianised thereby releasing those police officers for redeployment to other tasks. It is a matter for individual chief officers to decide how these additional resources should be used.

England and Wales - 3,327 posts
West Midlands police - 61 posts

Progress on civilianisation within Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Information on H division Walsall is not readily available.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations consulted on the issues covered by the Home Office review of core police functions.

Mr. Maclean: Consultation is currently under way with the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Superintendents Association, the Police Federation, the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities. My right hon. and learned Friend will decide on the appropriate level and type of wider consultation in the light of recommendations made by the review in its final report at the turn of the year.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the nature, length of time and extent of the consultation exercise he intends to carry out in response to the recommendation of the Home Office review of core police functions.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 21 July, columns 493-94.

Drinking Ban, Yarm

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made towards imposing a ban on drinking in public places in Yarm, Cleveland.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Home Office gave provisional approval on 31 October to the making of byelaws by Stockton-on-Tees borough council prohibiting the consumption of intoxicating liquor in designated parts of Yarm and Thornaby; and to the making of similar byelaws by Yarm town council in respect of two areas under its control.

Prisons

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be announcing the findings of his review into prison day release and home leave procedure.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have reviewed the arrangements for home leave and temporary release and expect to be able to announce our detailed conclusions shortly.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average cost per prisoner place, at the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 2 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on the average cost per prisoner place.

The average cost per prisoner place in 1993-94 was £22,712. This figure excludes exceptional items consisting of the costs of holding prisoners in police cells and compensation for abandonment of plans to relocate the Prison Service headquarters to Derby.

Dorset Police Authority

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from which police authorities police officers were seconded to Dorset police authority to police the annual Conservative party conference in Bournemouth; and how many officers were seconded from each of those authorities.

Mr. Maclean: It is not the practice to provide details of security arrangements.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Howard: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury, my right hon. Friend the member for Loughborough (Mr. Dorrell), to my hon. Friend the member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, column 391.

Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Cleveland on the measures against crime in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill.

Mr. Maclean: My hon. Friend has himself informed us of a number of representations which he has received about the Bill, and we have also received a small number—in similar terms—direct from members of the public in Cleveland.

I am confident that the people of Cleveland generally will appreciate that fears expressed about the Bill are misplaced and that it has a valuable part to play in fighting crime and protecting the public.

Film Censorship

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require that if the British Board of Film Classification finds it necessary to edit a section of a film under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill the board should state in full the reasons for the editing of the film.

Mr. Maclean: The British Board of Film Classification already provides the owner to the rights of a video in which it requires cuts with an explanation of those cuts. Owners who consider the decision by the board to be overly strict have a right of appeal to the video appeals committee, which has the power to vary the decision made by the board.

If in future the board reviews a work already classified before the introduction of the new statutory criteria, the owner of the work will similarly have the right of appeal against any fresh decision by the Board.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to review or change the membership of the British Board of Film Classification following the increase in the board's powers as a result of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill:

(2) if he will ensure that any proposals for changing the membership of the British Board of Film Classification will ensure that the membership reflects an accurate cross-section of society.

Mr. Maclean: The British Board of Film Classification is an independent body and my right hon. and learned Friend has no authority to determine its membership.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary for the Home Department what guidelines will be issued to the British Board of Film Classification concerning the editing and classification of films; and if they will include advice that before a scene is cut it will be viewed in the context of the entire film.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to issue any guidelines on the editing and classification of a video work. The British Board of Film Classification is an independent body and it alone is responsible for determining the classification given to any individual video work. If owners of the rights of works consider decisions by the board to be overly strict, they may appeal to the video appeals committee, itself a separate and independent body.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostel places exist in London for (a) men and (b) women.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: In the Greater London area, comprising the inner London, south-east London, south-west London, north-east London and Middlesex probation areas, there are currently a total of 349 approved hostel places. Of these, 273 are designated for men, 28 for women, and a further 48 are available for men or women as required.

Wheel Clamping

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish his findings arising from the consultations he received on wheel clamping following the issue of the consultation paper on this subject in February 1993, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 26 October, Official Report, column 642.

Bail

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the most recent available statistics on the number of offences and the number of persons involved who have over the last number of years committed crimes while on bail; and what steps he is taking to deal with this problem.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the numbers offending while on bail is not collected centrally. A Home Office research report, "RPU Report 65, Offending While on Bail; A Survey of Recent Studies", gives information on recent studies relating to offences while on bail. A copy of this report is available in the Library. The survey concludes that, on average, between 10 and 12 per cent. of defendants are subsequently convicted of an offence committed while on bail and nowhere was the figure more than 17 per cent. The inference from this and other studies is that more than 50,000 offences per year are committed by persons who are on bail.

The Government are committed to preventing offending on bail, through legislation, and by improving the information available to bail decision makers.

The Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill contains seven measures to do with bail. In particular, defendants charged with offences which appear to the court to have been committed while on bail will lose the "right" to bail, and the police have been given powers, to detain to prevent offending, and to arrest without warrant where police bail is breached. The Bail (Amendment) Act 1993, which came into force in the summer, gives the prosecution a right, in certain circumstances, to appeal against the grant of bail. Additionally, the Criminal Justice Act 1993 requires the courts to consider that an offence committed on bail should be treated more seriously when sentencing.

Serious Offences

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportions of successive male cohorts have been convicted of serious offences by the age of 15, 21 and 30 years of age.

Mr. Maclean: The available information is drawn from the offenders index and is shown in the following table.

Males born in 1953, 1958, 1963, 1968 or 1973: the cumulative percentage convicted[1] at the given age[2].

Humberside Police Authority

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation processes he proposes to undertake with representatives of the Police Federation, and other trade unions representing employees of the Humberside police authority, during his deliberations on the future of police structures in the Humberside area.

Mr. Maclean: Organisations representing the police service and trades unions which represent staff working in support of the police have been invited to comment on the future arrangements for policing in Humberside.

Fire Service, Humberside

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he proposes to have with the Fire Brigades Union on the future arrangements of the fire service in the Humberside area following the abolition of Humberside county council.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As he has indicated in his reply to a question yesterday from my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) my right hon. and learned Friend proposes to establish a combined fire authority for Humberside. Before reaching this decision, he received advice from a sub-committee of the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council on which the Fire Brigades Union is represented. He will also be considering advice from the sub-committee about the detailed arrangements for the establishment of the combined fire authority.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of a week in (a) Her Majesty's prison Holloway and (b) a bail hostel.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The net operating cost per place per week at Her Majesty's prison Holloway in the financial year 1993–94 was £554. The average cost of a place in a bail hostel in that year was £221 per week.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) convicted and (b) remand prisoners there were in Her Majesty's prison Holloway in each of the past 24 months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter From Derek Lewis to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 2 November 1994:

Jamaican Visitors

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the visitors who came into the United Kingdom on charter flights KT310 and ULE966 have returned to Jamaica after the period for which they were admitted expired; what steps are being taken to ensure that those who have overstayed in the United Kingdom beyond the date permitted for this visit are being traced with a view to deportation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Since departures from the United Kingdom are not comprehensively recorded, the information requested in the first part of the question is not available. The Immigration Service works with the police and other agencies to detect and deal with overstayers, using deportation powers where necessary. Efforts are being made to apprehend a number of passengers who arrived on the flights mentioned by my hon. Friend and are believed to have overstayed.

CND Demonstration

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with the Metropolitan police concerning the arrangements for the CND demonstration on 29 October.

Mr. Maclean: My Department received a brief report on the demonstration after the event.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have asked the Director General to ensure that the hon. Member receives a reply today.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Angela Eagle, dated 2 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking when you will receive a substantive reply to your letter of 26 May.

I sent you a substantive reply on 2 November.

Special Branch

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to revise the existing guidelines on the work of a special branch.

Mr. Howard: Revised "Guidelines on Special Branch Work in Great Britain" have been sent to all chief officers of police in Great Britain. I am placing a copy of the guidelines in the Library of the House.

Code of Practice on Financial Management

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he intends to issue the code of practice on financial management under section 28(c) of the Police Act 1964, as inserted by section 15 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994.

Mr. Howard: I have today laid before Parliament a copy of the code of practice on financial management which I have issued under section 28C of the 1964 Act. A copy of the code has been place in the Library of the House.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the law governing amusement arcades to give more power to local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 31 October 1994]: I have received some representations on this matter which I am considering.

The law is set out in section 34 and schedule 9 to the Gaming Act 1968. The grant of a permit for an amusement arcade is at the discretion of the local authority, but a permit cannot be refused without giving the applicant the opportunity of a hearing. There is no power to attach conditions to the grant of a permit. There is a right to appeal to the Crown court against refusal to grant a permit.

Renewal of permits may be refused only on certain limited grounds, such as that the authority has been denied access to inspect the premises.

Strangeways Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of incidents, giving in each case the date, type of incident with brief details, and the outcome, at Strangeways prison, Manchester since April 1994 to the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 2 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for a list of incidents, giving in each case the date, type of incident with brief details, and the outcome, at Wold prison, from 6 April 1992 to the latest available date.

Incidents reported by establishments to Prison Service Headquarters fall into the two categories of "major" or "minor", as defined in Prison Service Circular Instruction 18/1988. I attach details of incidents reported by The Wold during the period in question, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Cannabis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of those convicted of (a) possessing cannabis and (b) trafficking in cannabis were fined the maximum sum in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer on 31 October 1994]: The information is not available in the form requested.

Prisoners, East Midlands

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) remand and (b) convicted prisoner were held in police cells in (i) Nottinghamshire and (ii) the east midlands in each month of 1994 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 1 November 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

> The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the numbers of remand and convicted prisoners held in police cells in Nottinghamshire and the East Midlands in each month of 1994 to date.
> To date there have been no prisoners held in police cells in Nottinghamshire or the East Midlands in any month in 1994.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to bring anabolic steroids within the provisions of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. Michael Howard [holding answer 26 October 1994]: The misuse of anabolic steroids is a matter for concern and in view of the harmful effects surrounding their misuse, including a number of serious health problems, the Government have decided to impose further controls on them, in line with a recommendation of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs.

We propose to change the law to make it an offence, without authority, to produce, supply, or possess or import or export with intent to supply, anabolic steroids and other similar drugs. In accordance with the recommendation of ACMD it would not, however, be an offence simply to possess these drugs in the United Kingdom. The necessary draft order under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and amending regulations to effect these changes will be brought before Parliament in due course.

The proposals deliberately target illicit suppliers and traffickers. The maximum penalties will be three months imprisonment and a £2,500 fine, or both, on summary conviction and five years or an unlimited fine, or both, on indictment.

We intend to keep under review the effectiveness of the new controls in tackling the supply and trafficking of anabolic steroids and, if it proves necessary, we shall consider even tougher measures.

SCOTLAND

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish an up-to-date list of all the chairs and non-executive directors of each national health service trust board indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am arranging for a copy of the lists to be sent to the hon. Member and placed in the Libraries of the House.

National Parks

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of establishing national parks in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: The question of establishing national parks in Scotland has been examined many times. In 1988, Ministers invited the Countryside Commission for Scotland to investigate the management of Scotland's mountain areas. In reporting, the Commission recommended the creation of four national parks and the setting up of land management forums for the management of other, upland, areas. However, public consultation found no consensus in favour of national parks and the Government concluded that they were not satisfied that a need for national parks had been demonstrated.

In 1991, the Government established two working parties to examine the management of the Cairngorms area and of Loch Lomond and the Trossachs. These reported in 1992 and 1993 respectively and neither recommended that the national park model be followed. They each recommended management structures tailored to the areas, in particular addressing the different pressures and needs found in each. Both were put to public consultation and the Government expect shortly to indicate how they intend to proceed in relation to the reports.

Fishing Industry

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many decommissioning applications have been received from Scottish registered fishing vessels during 1994; how many were successful; if he will give a breakdown according to ports of registration; and if he will list the individual moneys made available per vessel.

Sir Hector Monro: One hundred and forty-nine applications for decommissioning grant were lodged with the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department before the closing date of 15 August; 49 of these have been successful in the tendering process and the owners of the vessels have been informed.

The following table shows the distribution of these successful bids between licence ports:

	Number
Arbroath	1
Ayr	9
Buckie	9
Campbeltown	7
Eyemouth	1
Fraserburgh	2
Lossiemouth	4
Macduff	2
Mallaig	4
Oban	1
Orkney	1
Pittenweem	1
Portree	1
Stornoway	2
Ullapool	1

These offers of decommissioning grant have not yet been accepted by vessel owners. Until the vessels have been scrapped and the licence entitlements surrendered, individual grant offers must remain confidential between the Department and the applicant.

Asthma

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his estimate of the number of individuals suffering from asthma in each of the past five years for each Scottish health board area;

(2) what is the estimate for the number of individuals under the age of 18 years suffering from asthama in each of the past five years in each Scottish health board area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information required to answer these questions is not centrally available.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of deaths from asthma for each year since 1990 in each Scottish health board area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table:

Common Services Agency (Computers)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those companies which have indicated an interest in the supply of £35 million worth of personal computers to the Common Services Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the practice to name companies which have indicated interest since this is usually on the basis of commercial confidentiality.

Tenders have been invited by the supplies division of the Common Services Agency of the NHS in Scotland for central contracts for the supply of personal computers over the next two years. The value of business is expected to be over £5 million per year. Tendering procedures followed EC regulations and 20 companies were invited to tender. Sixteen companies have submitted tenders and these are being evaluated. The successful tenderer will be announced in due course.

Local Government

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his most recent assessment of the number of jobs which will be lost following the implementation of his proposals for local government reform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Our estimate of the reduction in posts resulting from reform of local government in Scotland ranges from 220 to 1,800, well under 1 per cent. of the total of local government employees. The eventual outcome is of course dependent on the organisational and staffing decisions taken by the new authorities, during the shadow year and beyond.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that any new authorities created as a result of local government reorganisation should be capable of directly providing the full range of public and support services within their own resources.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's policy, as set out in the White Paper "Shaping the Future—The New Councils" Cm 2267, is that the proposed new councils should have available a range of service delivery options, including direct provision, joint arrangements of various kinds with other councils and contracting with external suppliers. It will be for each new council to decide how best it can fulfil its statutory obligations with the maximum effectiveness and efficiency.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy not to implement changes to local government structures which are likely to place jobs at risk.

Mr. Stewart: It has never been a policy of this Government to place jobs at risk. The reform of local government in Scotland is intended to make councils more responsive to the wishes of their citizens, and more effective in the delivery of services. With the removal of unnecessary duplication, it seems likely that fewer staff will be required in the new structure. But we estimate that the reduction in posts will be significantly less than 1 per cent. and with sensible planning by authorities most of this could be found by natural wastage and early retirement measures. Large job losses would imply that local government is currently overmanned.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent assessment he has made of the extent to which his proposals for local government reform would require joint arrangements between local authorities and the contracting of functions in order to maintain both services and facilities at their current levels.

Mr. Stewart: Under the proposed new local government structure, councils will, as now, have a range of options available to them in terms of how they carry out their functions. These will include entering into joint arrangements of various kinds with other councils and contracting with external suppliers. It will be for each new council to decide how best it can fulfil its statutory obligations with the maximum effectiveness and efficiency.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his intention to ensure that, following the implementation of his proposals for local government reform, a package of staff protection and compensation measures will be available which will be at least as beneficial to staff as those arrangements which were put into practice after the last reorganisation of local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill provides that staff who transfer by order will do so on existing terms and conditions of service. In addition, there exists an extensive framework of employment protection legislation, much of which was not available at the time of the last reorganisation of local government in Scotland. The Secretary of State is currently considering what compensation arrangements should apply in the light of the advice he has received from the Staff Advisory Committee, now the shadow Staff Commission, the views expressed by local authorities in response to consultation and the proposals for England and Wales. Draft regulations are expected to be published by the end of the year.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to establish a mandatory national framework to maintain continuity of employment for those affected by changes in local government as a result of his proposals, together with full protection of terms and conditions of employment and service; if he will provide sufficient resources, in addition to those required for the maintenance of services at their present levels, to ensure that such protection is available to all of the affected employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: In addition to the protection afforded by existing employment law, the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill provides specifically that staff who transfer by order will do so with their existing terms and conditions intact. The Bill also includes safeguards with regard to continuity of service of local government employees. The protection which will be afforded by the Act, following Royal Assent, and by existing employment legislation will place legal requirements and obligations on new authorities which will be taken into account in the local government finance settlements for 1995–96 and subsequent years.

Super-quarry, Lingarabay

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the likely costs to the Government of the public inquiry into the proposed super-quarry at Lingarabay in the Hebrides; and if he will consider contributing to the costs which will be incurred by the Western Isles island council in making representations to that inquiry.

Mr. Stewart: The latest estimate of the likely costs to the Government of the public local inquiry into the proposed super-quarry at Lingarabay is £120,000.

The matter of contributing to the costs which will be incurred by the Western Isles island council in participating in the inquiry has been the subject of correspondence between, among others, my right hon. Friend and the convener. He has considered the request carefully but has made it clear that he is unable to make an exception to the statutory requirement for such costs to be met by the council.

Historic Scotland Agency

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has completed the review of the Historic Scotland executive egency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have reviewed Historic Scotland at the end of its first three years as an executive agency and have concluded that agency status should continue. Historic Scotland's performance has been evaluated, and it has taken significant steps forward, in particular:

it has consistently achieved almost all of its targets

it has made significant improvements in the delivery of services to all its customers.

Historic Scotland's framework document has been revised and I have placed copies in the Libraries of both Houses.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish an up-to-date list of all the (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each tourist board, indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 October 1994]: Area tourist boards in Scotland are established by local authorities under discretionary powers. They are generally either associations or companies. Members of their committees are mainly either appointed as representatives of local authorities or are elected from within the tourism industry membership. I am arranging for a copy of the current lists to be sent to the hon. Member and placed in the Libraries of the House.

Land Ownership and Use

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much land, in hectares, is owned by the Crown Commission in Scotland; and if he will publish a breakdown in terms of (a) forestry, (b) agricultural land in productive use, (c) agricultural land in set-aside, (d) sporting land, (e) inland waters, (f) coastal waters, (g) urban land and property and (h) crofting land.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 October 1994]: Each year the Crown Estate Commissioners publish an annual report which contains a schedule of all Crown Estate properties including a breakdown by Scottish regions and individual estates.

At 31 March 1994 the total acreage of agriculture and forestry lands held by the Crown Estate in Scotland amounted to 34,947 hectares. This comprised predominantly, land let through agricultural tenancies and included areas also used for sporting purposes. Principal forestry areas amounted to around 4,290 hectares.

The Crown Estate owns approximately half of the foreshore and almost all of the seabed around the coast of Scotland although ownership does not extend to fresh water lochs.

The urban holdings in the ownership of the Crown Estate amounts to some 10 hectares with a further 97,500 sq ft of office space. No land is held under crofting tenure.

Rent-to-mortgage Scheme

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the total cost for (a) publicity and (b) administration of the rent-to-mortgage scheme since the date when this policy was first implemented; and how many tenants in each sector of public housing have (i) applied to take part in the scheme and (ii) signed an agreement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 October 1994]: Advertising of the pilot rent-to-mortgage scheme in spring 1991 and spring 1992 cost £381,000 and some 21,000 responses requesting further information were received. The right to buy and the statutory rent-to-mortgage—introduced in September 1993—were promoted together in campaigns in autumn 1993 and spring 1994, at a cost of £512,000, and over 12,400 responses were received.

The administration of the rent-to-mortgage scheme is a matter for local authorities, Scottish Homes and the new town development corporations; information on administration costs is not held centrally.

The number of applications to purchase and complete sales under the rent-to-mortgage scheme up to July 1994 by each sector is shown in the table:

Rent-to-mortgage in Scotland

	Applications	Sales
Local authorities	1,467	457
Scottish Homes	737	346
New towns	38	61
	2,242	864

The Scottish Homes application total includes some in respect of New Town houses.

Edinburgh Royal Infirmary

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what conditions in relation to private finance have been attached to the granting of capital consent for building the new royal infirmary of Edinburgh;

(2) what are the general implications of the involvement of private finance in the building of the new royal infirmary of Edinburgh for (a) the public sector borrowing requirement and (b) future current expenditure;

(3) what are the implications for private beds of the involvement of private finance in the building of the new royal infirmary of Edinburgh;

(4) what are the implications for ownership of the involvement of private finance in the building of the new royal infirmary of Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1994]: Ministers are currently considering Lothian health board's proposals for acute services including the building of a new royal infirmary and an announcement will be made shortly. The Edinburgh Royal Infirmary NHS trust is currently exploring the scope for the private financing of a new hospital, should approval to this development be given. Meanwhile, no decisions on private finance has been taken.

Children (Legislation)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the difficulties he has identified with introducing a children's Bill for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1994]: Work is in hand to prepare the necessary legislation and my right hon. Friend has in mind to introduce it when parliamentary time is available.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has come to a decision on the scope of legislation for children.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The legislation on children, which is in preparation, will be based on the proposals set out in the White Paper "Scotland's Children", Cm 2286, and will also draw on those proposals in the Scottish Law Commission's report on "Family Law", Scot Law Com No 135, 1992, relating to children.

Health Care International

Mr. Worthington: to ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that Health Care International in Clydebank is using national health service pay and conditions for its staff.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1994]: Since the authorisation of the building of the Health Care International hospital at Clydebank was granted in 1987, NHS trusts have been introduced with the freedom to determine the terms and conditions of service for the majority of their staff. HCI is aware of the principles which underlie the authorisation.

Dentists

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the effect of the current national health service terms on whether dentists in Scotland are withdrawing from national health service work or seeking to increase their private practice.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1994]: Since the current dental contract was introduced on 1 October 1990, the number of dentists on health board lists have increased from 1,626 to 1,757. General dental practitioners are independent contractors who are free to choose whether they wish to join a health board dental list to provide NHS services, and to decide whether to give NHS treatment to each individual patient. No information is available on dentists' private practices.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Liberia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what projects Britain's contribution to the Liberian trust fund has been spent.

Mr. Baldry: We have contributed $1 million to the UN voluntary trust fund for Liberia, including > $251,000 on a public information campaign to encourage national reconciliation and to facilitate disarmament; and

> $65,000 on generators for the University of Liberia and JFK hospital.

The balance has been earmarked for emergency assistance to persons affected by the fighting, a demobilisation programme, trauma counselling and further support to the public information campaign.

Conference on Women

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the leader of the British delegation to the UN conference on women in Beijing in 1995, the hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe), will support and promote in Beijing the declaration of the UN conference on population and development in Cairo.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom delegation to the fourth UN world conference on women in Peking will follow Government policy in relation to the programme of action adopted at Cairo. Its composition has yet to be determined.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Overseas Development Administration's policy document "Children by Choice not Chance", will be supported and promoted by the British delegation at the UN conference on women in Beijing in 1995.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom delegation to the fourth UN world conference on women in Peking in 1995 will support Government policy, including those in the booklet "Children by Choice, not Chance—Meeting the Challenge".

Scholarships

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the number of nationalities of students on Chevening scholarships in each year since 1985; and if he will list the number and nationalities of students funded by the Commonwealth scholarship and fellowship plan in each year since 1985;

(2) what was the number and nationality of students on Overseas Development Administration shared scholarships in each year since 1985.

Mr. Baldry: The information currently available has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

International (Atomic Energy Agency)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what uses Overseas Development Administration funding of the International Atomic Energy Agency in 1992–93 was put.

Mr. Baldry: In 1992–93 the Overseas Development Administration contributed towards 23 separate research projects aimed at encouraging the peaceful uses of nuclear energy in developing countries who are signatories of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Bilateral Technical Co-operation

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from the Overseas Development Administration budget for bilateral technical co-operation in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Mr. Baldry: A list of the consultants, the projects on which they were engaged with the value of the contracts, has been placed in the Library of the House. Details of the actual payments made to each consultant could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nepal (Dam)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the estimated risks to the success of the Arun III hydro-power project in Nepal from (a) glacier lake outburst flow, (b) earthquakes and (c) possible future irrigation or hydro-electric developments upstream in Tiber; and what efforts are being made by the projects planners to ensure that any such risks to the success of the dam and the prosperity of Nepal are fully researched and minimised.

Mr. Baldry: The geological risks and impact on upstream developments have been studied and taken into account in the design of the project. An independent panel of experts has been involved with the design, and in advising on safety aspects as well as geological, hydraulic, seismic, structural and environmental aspects.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has that the Arun III project in Nepal will contribute to the development of technical and managerial capacity in the Nepali private sector.

Mr. Baldry: The Nepalese authorities have drawn on local private sector expertise in preparing the project; and local staff will be responsible for a substantial proportion of the supervision contract. In addition, the Government of Nepal are committed to facilitating private sector investment in the power sector. The proposed project includes a facility to strengthen the capacity of the private sector to undertake feasibility studies and to provide partial financing in selected cases.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to whether the rate of return, quoted in the World bank's staff appraisal report, as expected for the Arun III hydro-power project in Nepal, is a sufficient economic return to justify a World bank decision to fund the project.

Mr. Baldry: We are currently assessing the bank's appraisal of this project, including the economic analysis and justification.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds the World bank has not established an inventory of the species at risk from the planned Arun III hydro-power project.

Mr. Baldry: One of the volumes in the environmental impact study, which was an important element in the bank's appraisal and was carried out by the King Mahendra Trust for Nature Conservation, is devoted to a survey and catalogue of biodiversity in the Arun basin.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the World bank will make a final decision on funding for the Arun III dam project in Nepal.

Mr. Baldry: A date has not yet been fixed for consideration of this project proposal by the bank's board of directors.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis the Overseas Development Administration and the United Kingdom executive director to the World bank decide what constitutes a least-cost approach to meeting energy needs when evaluating projects; and if he will place in the Library the cost benefit analysis and least-cost study on the Arun III hydro-power project in Nepal.

Mr. Baldry: The least-cost approach to generation expansion and cost benefit analysis are standard project appraisal techniques employed by the bank. A copy of the least-cost generation expansion plan, excluding the detailed technical annexes, is being placed in the Libraries of the House. Under existing rules of procedure, the bank's appraisal report remains confidential for the time being; but a copy will be placed in the Libraries after board approval of the project.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what basis a comparative assessment of alternatives to the Arun III project in Nepal was performed; and what conclusions were reached regarding the suitability of small-scale and mini-hydro options for tapping the power potential of Nepal.

Mr. Baldry: The bank's appraisal report considers the option of smaller hydro-power schemes as an alternative investment strategy and concludes that the overall balance points in favour of the Arun project.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the World bank to ensure that the Nepal electricity authority has the institutional capacity to manage and recover revenue from a completed Arun III hydro-power project.

Mr. Baldry: The Nepal Electricity Authority has engaged consultants to help it adopt measures to strengthen its financial management and cost recovery, including reducing system losses and improved revenue collection performance. The Asian development bank intends to provide technical assistance to the NEA to strengthen its environmental unit.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of whether the proposed Arun III dam project in Nepal is consistent with the country assistance strategy developed for Nepal by the world bank.

Mr. Baldry: This is among the issues covered in the staff appraisal report and is being taken into account in our assessment of the proposal.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of Nepali citizens are expected to benefit from access to the power generated by the Arun III hydro-power project, if completed.

Mr. Baldry: The project is designed to help meet the growth in demand for power in Nepal as a whole, for industrial users and domestic consumers alike. The World bank estimates that currently only 9 per cent. of Nepal's population of 20 million has access to electricity, and that this share is expected to double by the end of the project period.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guarantees have been provided to the World bank as to whether India will buy the excess energy to be generated by the Arun III hydro-power project planned in Nepal, and to ensure prompt payment for any electricity India undertakes to buy from Nepal.

Mr. Baldry: The project is not designed as a power export project, but to meet Nepal's domestic energy needs.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank has taken regarding the development of the World bank's cost-accounting system for the World bank; and what input he has made to that development.

Mr. Baldry: The task force on portfolio management identified weaknesses in the bank's consideration of risk and sensitivity analysis in its loan appraisals. As a response to that report bank management are producing new guidelines on the use of risk/sensitivity analysis. The United Kingdom executive director has been active in pressing the bank to undertake full and thorough follow-up to the task force recommendations.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the early retirement of Martin Karcher, division chief for the south Asia region in the World bank.

Mr. Baldry: We are not in a position to comment on Mr. Karcher's early retirement.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the type of cost accounting methodology now applied by the World bank to the loans in its portfolio.

Mr. Baldry: The World bank applies well-established techniques of economic and financial analysis on all its loans, including cost benefit and cost effectiveness analysis where appropriate.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the total British contribution to the funds of the World bank was invested in the Sardar Sarova dam before the World bank withdrew finance from the project.

Mr. Baldry: The bank's board of directors approved an IBRD loan and two IDA credits for the Sardar Sarovar dam project and associated canal in March 1985. IBRD shareholder capital is not used to finance bank loans directly, but as a guarantee for the bank's borrowings on the international capital markets. In 1985, the United Kingdom held 6 per cent. of the IBRD's subscribed capital. At the end of June 1994, the share was 4·92 per cent. The IDA credits were committed under the seventh replenishment of IDA, the United Kingdom share of which was 6·70 per cent.

Monopolies and Mergers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what referrals to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission within his remit Her Majesty's Government have made since the creation of his Department.

Departmental Finances

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes he proposes to make to his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1994–95.

Mr. Dorrell: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates for class XI, the following changes will be made:

i) The cash limit for vote 1 (museums and galleries) will be increased by £100,000 from £223,022,000 to £223,122,000 to cover the costs of the transitional funding of the Yorkshire mining museum.

ii) The cash limit for vote 2 (arts) will be increased by £605,000 from £194,974,000 to £195,579,000. The increase provides for an additional £70,000 for research, surveys and other services and an increase of £535,000 in respect of the capital end-year flexibility scheme to meet residual Government contributions towards the costs for theatre restoration. This increase will be partly offset by savings on class XI, vote 3 (libraries), where the cash limit will be reduced by £70,000 from £139,373,000 to £139,303,000 in respect of a saving of expenditure on the public library development incentive scheme.

iii) The cash limit for vote 6 (Royal Palaces, Historic Royal Palaces Agency, Royal Parks Agency, historic buildings, ancient monuments and the national heritage) will be reduced by £100,000 from £195,062,000 to £194,962,000 to reflect a transfer to the Scottish Office to cover costs arising from a state visit to Edinburgh.

iv) The net increase in provision will be charged to the reserve, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Satellite Broadcasting

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his Department's policy towards monopoly provision of satellite broadcasting in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: Any operator is free to establish a satellite service provided it meets the conditions laid out in the Broadcasting Act 1990. At present 87 non-domestic satellite broadcast services are licensed by the Independent Television Commission.

"Multimedia in the Home"

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will obtain a copy of the Inteco report "Multimedia in the Home"; and if he will make a statement on its implications for his Department.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes to the BBC are currently under consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We published our proposals for the future of the BBC in a White Paper on 6 July.

Cross-media Ownership

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list those rules relating to cross-media ownership between television companies and newspapers which do not apply to non-domestic satellites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Restrictions on the proprietors of newspapers owning licensed broadcast services are set out in part IV of schedule 2 to the Broadcasting Act 1990. There are no restrictions relating to cross-holdings between newspaper proprietors and non-domestic satellite stations beyond the general provisions set out in chapter 1 of part 1 of the Act.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to publish the White Paper on cross-media ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when his Department expects to bring forward proposals arising from the BBC White Paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Comments on the White Paper were invited by 31 October. I will consider the comments received before preparing the new royal charter and agreement which will govern the BBC's activities in the future. I expect to prepare these documents during the course of 1995.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the latest information on his Department's exploration with the BBC of the privatisation of transmission services.

Mr. Dorrell: I have appointed consultants to consider the options for the future of the BBC's transmission service, and to make recommendations.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, what percentage of public appointments made by his Department were held by women at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest published figures for the Department of National Heritage—that is, those given in "Public Bodies 1993"—are: out of a total of 651 public appointees 142 or 22 per cent. are held by women. The 1994 figures are still being collected and will be announced in due course.

(2) if he will list the developments in freedom of information introduced by his Department since its creation.

Mr. Dorrell: In common with other Government Departments the DNH is implementing the code of practice on access to Government information introduced in April 1994. Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list all those organisations for which his Department has oversight other than the BBC and not established in statute by royal charter or other executive powers.

Mr. Dorrell: Most of the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department were set up under statute or royal charter. The exceptions are;

The Geffrye Museum, the Horniman Museum, the Greater Manchester Museum of Science and Industry and the National Film and Television School, all of which are companies limited by guarantee,

The Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts, set up by Royal Warrant in 1869 (reissued in 1959),

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the average cost to his Department of answering (a) a written and (b) an oral parliamentary question.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave as Financial Secretary to the Treasury to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 30 November 1993, Official Report column 387.

Archaeological Services

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he intends to take as a result of the review by Capita Consultants into the provision of archaeological services on London.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department commissioned the report, in partnership with the Museum of London, English Heritage and the Corporation of London, following a request from the museum to help the parties concerned to examine the problem. Those parties now have a copy of the consultant's report and it is for them to take what action they think appropriate. In this respect, responsibility for policy on archaeology in London rests with English Heritage, while the Museum of London has responsibility for the Museum of London archaeology service.

Mr. Sproat: My Department does not keep records of such estimates.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 1 November 1994]: The award of the Channel 5 licence is a matter for the Independent Television Commission. Procedures for awarding licences are set out in the Broadcasting Act 1990. The invitation to apply for Channel 5 issued by the ITC does not preclude an applicant from proposing the use of digital transmission. I am sure that any application made on this basis will receive due consideration.
